Canadian Exhibits Abroad

Canadians when they go abroad invariably come home with a higher appreciation of Canada. This is partly due, no doubt, to the real advantages Canada offers, but it may also be attributed in part to the excellent representation of Canadian things that has been made in foreign countries. The Dominion Government, for instance, has the reputation of showing collections of Canadian products at the leading international fairs, which for excellence of products exhibited and artistic presentations are rarely equalled by any other country.

The Canadian Pacific Railway also has carried on a very important work in making Canada's resources known in other lands and particularly in the neighboring republics. Not only at such international events as the Panama-Pacific Exposition a year ago, but also in exhibits of a more local nature, the Canadian Pacific Railway has lost no opportunity of representing Canadian resources in a manner of which the citizens of this country may well be proud. Hand-some displays of Canada's resources including minerals and fruit, but more particularly the products of the western farms, are maintained at a number of the chief centres throughout the United States and never fail to excite favorable comment.

One of the exhibits recently established is at the Bureau of Industry and Agriculture conducted by the Chicago Herald on the second floor of the Ashland block, corner of Clark and Randolph streets, Chicago. At this Bureau are exhibits showing the resources of many of the states of the United States and also of Canada. Canadians visiting Chicago are invited to call at the Bureau at the address given above and make themselves known to the attendant in charge of the Canadian Pacific Railway exhibit there. All our readers having friends in the south who are likely to visit Chicago during the winter can do their country a good turn by suggesting that these friends take advantage of their visit there, to see for themselves what Canada has to offer. The Bureau is open every week-day and motion pictures illustrating the different districts represented, are run in a special feature hall. No charge is made for admittance either to the exhibit or to the motion picture hall.

Address and Presentation

The following is an address and presentation given Miss Annie Forrestal by the teacher and pupils of S.S. No. 6, Rawdon:

Dec. 15th, '16
DEAR ANNIE:
We, your teacher and fellow pupils feel that we can not let you leave us without in some way showing you how we will miss you from our circle. Your attentiveness and obedience during school hours will always help to urge us on to follow your example.

At play, agreeableness has ever been your motto, and you have practiced it day after day. Your cheerful manner has so endeared you to each one of us, that now we find it hard to say good-bye, but we trust that in your future home you will find friends who will appreciate your goodness as fully as we have. Be assured that although you are leaving us, our best wishes will ever be with you and in order to more fully show our inmost feelings we ask you to accept this camera as a slight token of our esteem.

Signed on behalf of the school.
WINNIE MARTIN,
ROSE SINE,
RUSSELL BENFIELD.

STIRLING BRANCH—W. S. Martin, Manager Branch also at Spring Brook.

The Bird's Tail.
In his "Story of the Birds" James Newton Baskett says: To a slight extent in some birds the tail may be used as a rudder, but where the wing is perfected turning is effected with a very scant tail. The use of the tail always has more reference to the up and down movements than to the lateral. It comes into play in alighting (as a brake) or in rising (as a kite-like surface) and is used dexterously by the soaring birds in balancing themselves against varying currents of air.

Malacca Sticks.
The most costly walking sticks come from the Malay archipelago, and the most highly prized stick is the malacca cane. To insure straightness these sticks are reared in glass tubes. A good malacca should be a yard long, not less than an inch in diameter at the upper end, perfectly straight and smooth and of a very dark chocolate color, slightly mottled. It should be used delicately, for the lacquer which gives it its beautiful gloss is easily chipped.—London Graphic.

Guarded His Beard.
As Sir Thomas More laid his head on the block he begged the executioner to wait a moment while he carefully placed his beard out of reach of the ax, for he said: "It hath not committed treason," which reminds one of the story of Simon Lord Lovat, who the day before his execution on Tower hill bade the operator who shaved him be cautious not to cut his throat, as such an accident would cause disappointment to the gaping crowd on the morrow.—English Magazine.

Dr. Syntax.
On the English coast, at Land's End there stands a curiously formed bowlder with a profile resembling that of a human face. It is supposed that once the rocky head was held proudly erect and could look out over the blue sea, but during some period of disturbance the huge bowlder was thrown forward, so that now the forehead of the man rests against a neighboring rock. All these rugged and massive pieces bordering the coast are fine granite. Locally the curious bowlder is known as Dr. Syntax.

He Gave Him a Tip.
One of the best tipping stories concerns an ancestor of Lord Durham, who always wore a rough coat made from the fleece of his own sheep. When a new doorkeeper in parliament refused to admit him he sat quietly down on a doorstep to wait the arrival of some one who could vouch for him. When this happened the doorkeeper became profuse in apology and then had the impudence to "hope your honor will give me something to remember you by again." Lambton looked him up and down and then caught him a mighty blow. "Aye, lad," said he as he passed in, "I don't think ye'll forget old Lambton again."—London Standard.

A Ball on the Window Shade.
It frequently occurs in adjusting spring roller blinds that the cord slips through the band and the blind not only winds up to the top, but continues until the spring has spent its force and the blind and cord are rolled up out of reach. It is then necessary to use a chair or a step ladder to reach just it. All this trouble and annoyance can be avoided if a small hollow rubber ball is obtained and holes punched through so it may be threaded on the curtain string and tied close to the stick. Should the blind slip away with this attachment the ball will jam up against the window frame, preventing further winding up.

Robustness.
"Father," said the small boy, "what is a hypochondriac?"
"A hypochondriac, my son, is a person whose constitution is so strong that he can stand any amount of worry about his health."—Washington Star.

Quinte Boy's Conference

The second Biennial Methodist Boy's Conference at Lindsay last week was a great success, 300 delegates registering. From Stirling and Rawdon went Karl Clancy, Wes. Johnson, Osborne Smith, W. Harlowe, Maurice Windsor with Rev. S. F. Dixon, West Huntingdon also sent a good contingent with Rev. C. S. Reddick, B.A.

The Canadian standard efficiency tests were explained, aiming at the four-fold development of the boy in the third relay of the race of life, viz: between 14 and 20 years of age. This is based on the boy life of Jesus, "He increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." His was a normal development in physical, intellectual and religious life, all issuing in service to man. The standard efficiency tests are worthy of study and application by all S.S. workers among boys and are being used by all the Protestant churches.

Dr. T. Albert Moore gave a great address Thursday night. F. H. Langford, B.A., and Taylor Statten, Y.M.C.A., Toronto, made a fine team and gripped the boys.

Lindsay Methodists were enthusiastic and gave the fellows a fine banquet Friday night, to which they invited their own S.S. boys of the 'teen age.

Taylor Statten says the boy smoking cigarettes is simply a boy gone wrong through a wrong idea that is mainly, it isn't really up-to-date even, as big firms are absolutely refusing to employ boys who smoke cigarettes, and he advised boys to cut it out, at least, until they are 21 years of age.

Another conference will be held in 2 years, likely nearer Stirling.

Letter to the School

Canadian Engineers, Crowborough
Camp, Sussex, Eng., Dec. 8, '16.
THE PRINCIPAL, Stirling High School:

Please convey to those concerned who sent the Xmas stocking to me, my sincere thanks for remembering me. I enjoyed very much opening the stocking and finding the things they had been so kind to send.

Everything was in the best order possible after their long journey. Receiving this stocking brought back many happy days I spent at the school; Although I am far away from Stirling, I always have a warm spot in my heart for the place.

I shall have to close and again thank the school for so kindly remembering me. I wish every one a very happy Xmas and kindest thoughts for the new year.

Sincerely,
Lieut. J. F. Haggerty.

Letter of Condolence

Stirling, Ont., Dec. 29th, '16
Dear Mrs. BOYTON and Mrs. LUCY:
We, the members of River Valley W. I., wish to express to you our deepest sympathy on your sad bereavement.

We know you both feel keen and deep in sorrow over the loss of dear mother and grandmother, who has been taken from you, but yet we know God's ways are the right ways. It seems hard to lose the dearest one we have, "Our Mother." For there is no one can fill the place in our hearts as she can.

But it is a blessed recollection to think and know we shall all have a happy meeting beyond, in the sweet bye and bye.

Signed on behalf of River Valley Institute.

Majority Favors Dairy Act

Only three out of the seventeen conventions held throughout Eastern Ontario for the purpose of discussing the Dairy Standards Act, passed resolutions against it. Practically all the others strongly favored the legislation. Considering the far-reaching nature of the Act, this is a favorable showing, and demonstrates that the department did not err in its estimate as to the number of dairy farmers who were waiting for this reform. The soundness of the principle of being paid for milk at factories according to its value for cheesemaking purposes, strongly appeals to the business judgment of the great majority of cheese factory patrons. Some who, realizing the importance of having the testing done accurately when the distribution of the patrons' money depended upon it, foresaw difficulties in the way unless the testing were in the hands of thoroughly competent men, free from local influences have had their objections removed by the action of the Department in making provision for the instructors to do the testing. Everything now goes to show that there existed a widespread demand for a change in our methods of paying for milk at cheese factories.

There are, of course, some who are opposed to the Dairy Standards Act. But is there not just reason for believing them to be fair-minded men, willing to stand behind the grand old principle of majority rule? We believe they are. We have met and talked with many of them, and have found that they are perfectly willing to abide by the will of the majority. They recognize that only by uniformity in the method of paying for milk throughout the province could friction between factories be prevented, and that the compulsory clauses of the Act were necessary to secure such uniformity. They also recognize that the Provincial Legislature is the only body having authority to fairly legislate in that matter, and that it would be impossible for them to have a spotted law exempting certain districts. While the matter was under discussion at the conventions they were not backward in voicing their opinions, but when the vote had been taken and resolutions favoring the Act passed, as they were at over three-quarters of the conventions, they acquiesced with good grace in the will of the majority. There is no need for apprehension regarding the working out of the Dairy Standards Act. The attitude of factory patrons throughout Eastern Ontario warrants the prediction that within a short time after its inauguration, opposition to it will have entirely died away.—Farm and Dairy.

Met Bell Telephone Representative

A meeting of the Stirling merchants and farmers of Rawdon Township was hurriedly called to meet in the agricultural room on the afternoon of Tuesday last to meet with Mr. W. Doan, representative of the Bell Telephone Co. to discuss the question of continuing the free use according to agreement of Campbellford and Stirling Centrals.

Thos. Montgomery, Esq., Reeve of Rawdon occupied the chair. Mr. Doan spoke at some length in the interest of the Bell Telephone Co., but did not hold out much hope that anything would be done in the matter.

A sharp discussion took place in the afternoon, L. Meiklejohn, Dr. Potts, F. T. Ward and others took part.

The meeting was decidedly in favor of asking the Bell Telephone Co. to relieve their customers in this district from their contracts and proceed to build a rural line of their own.

The discussion showed in a very marked way that those present meant business and that further steps would be taken in the near future.

ALLY REPLY TO GERMANY AGREED UPON

Britain and France Settle Terms and Will Answer
This Week.

WILSON NEXT

Russia Has Sent Her Reply to French Government, Too.

London, Cable.—Great Britain and France have fully agreed upon the terms of the reply to be made to the peace proposals of the Teutonic allies, the Associated Press learned at the Foreign Office to-day. It is hoped here that the answer may be despatched by the end of this week, but other nations of the Entente, although agreed in principle, may require verbal alterations, which would necessitate further delay.

It is expected that once this reply has been forwarded the responses to President Wilson's note will follow very shortly.

Russia's reply to the German peace proposals was telegraphed Monday to the French Government, says a Reuter despatch from Petrograd.

MOST UNMASK BATTERIES.

Paris, Cable.—The newspapers to-day comment freely on Germany's reply to President Wilson's note concerning peace. All of them affirm that it contains nothing not contained in the first communication of Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German Imperial Chancellor, except that it proposes a conference in some neutral capital.

"Germany," says the Temps, "invites her adversaries to a conference without making to them any disclosure of what she proposes to say until their delegates surround the green cloth."

"Germany desires peace, that is evident," continues the Temps, "but it will be a German peace which she will tear from her adversaries by a ruse, not having had the power to conquer them by force. That is the significance of the manoeuvre which outlines itself more clearly every day."

La Liberté remarks that Germany received the American note on December 22, and that her reply had already left Berlin the 26th. "Never in the exchanges of communications with the Government at Washington," says La Liberté, "has Wilhelmstrasse shown such celerity. In the period of the torpedoing of the Lusitania Germany allowed entire months to pass without communicating to Mr. Wilson explanations, embarrassing and belated. The German note is silent on the essential point; it evades that entirely. The trap is more evident than ever, but the allies will not be caught."

THINK GOOD HAS RESULTED.

Washington, Report.—In spite of the wide gulf between the insistence of the Central Powers for an immediate peace conference and forecast of a unanimous refusal by the Entente Allies to enter such a conference without knowing Germany's terms in advance, the United States Government believes that the negotiations in progress are resulting in good.

While there were no official advices upon the subject, the view still persisted in German quarters to-night that the note of the Central Powers might be followed by some highly confidential oral or written communication to President Wilson, in which at least broad tentative terms might be stated. In this connection officials noted with interest Berlin despatches saying that Ambassador Gerard, who as a result of his recent visit to the United States is thoroughly familiar with the views of President Wilson, had taken lunch with Alfred Zimmermann, the German Foreign Minister, and probably discussed the peace situation with him.

Just what the United States could do toward bridging the gulf in case the Allies hold to their opposition to a conference is the subject of serious discussion among officials, but as yet no concrete proposal has been advanced. It is said officially that it even has not yet been decided whether this country will send on to the Entente the Teutonic reply to the President's note, as embodying a new suggestion, or whether its mere publication here would be considered sufficient. The official text of this reply still is awaited and no further step is expected before it arrives.

The extreme delicacy of the situation and the fear of misstep on the part of each group of belligerents convince officials that it may be a long time before any really substantial result is obtained.

That the Allies will declare that there must be a military solution to the war, both in their note to the President and in their reply to the Central powers was the growing belief here to-day both on the basis of statements at the Allied Embassies and from despatch to-day following one from Petrograd yesterday as well as intimations from both Paris and Rome that the Allies could not discuss peace until they actually held the territories they considered essential to their future.

Just what the Allies would expect to wait for a substantial military victory and a reversal of the present military situation.

OFFER MADE SERIOUSLY.

Amsterdam, Cable.—Commenting on the German reply to President Wilson's note, the Lokal Anzeiger of Berlin says: "From the fact that Germany has not allowed the Christmas festival to pass without replying to President Wilson's note, even our enemies must gain the conviction that we made the peace offer seriously. Should Mr. Wilson be induced by our note to recommend to our enemies that they send representatives to a neutral place for the purpose of peace negotiations, we should still be far from abandoning ourselves to the hope that the move would meet with success at London, Paris, Petrograd and Rome."

The Taegliche Rundschau of Berlin says: "Our Government's announcement of its desire to bring about an end of the conflict with our enemies in personal negotiations without the co-operation of neutrals is very satisfactory, because it gives us a guarantee that we will decline decisively the interference of non-participants in the fighting and in the creation of peace."

The Vossische Zeitung, referring to the Swiss note, says: "If further neutral notes are couched in similar terms, they certainly will find a sympathetic understanding among us. The Swiss note breathes the honesty of that true neutrality which has characterized Switzerland during the entire war."

NO MORE AIR RECRUITS.

Ottawa, Report.—The Naval Service Department announced to-day that no more Canadian recruits for the naval air service will be required for some time, probably some months. A large number of Canadians have offered for this service, and enough have been accepted to provide a steady movement overseas for two or three months. In addition there is a lengthy list of eligible men from which recruits may be taken.

WORLD'S POTATO CROP SHORT.

Rome, Cable.—The International Institute of Agriculture reports poor potato crops in northern hemisphere. Its provisional estimates are 201,000,000 quintals for nine countries, including the United States, Canada, Italy and Japan, and also England, Ireland and Scotland, where the crops are the lowest on record. The figures for Germany and Austria are not available.

NO TIME NOW TO TALK PEACE

Czar Says Enemy Sees Defeat is Near.

While Allies' Strength Grows Daily.

Petrograd, Cable.—In the course of an order issued to all the units of the Russian army, dated Dec. 25, the Emperor, in a brief review showing the inequalities of the technical resources for warfare as between the allies and the central powers are being gradually removed, with the result that the enemy's strength is appearing, while that of Russia is growing, proceeds to say:

"Germany is feeling that her complete defeat is near, and near also is the hour of retribution for all her wrongdoings and violation of the moral law. As in the time of her strength she declared war, so now, feeling her weakness near, she suddenly offers to enter upon peace negotiations, desiring to complete such negotiations before her military talent is exhausted."

"At the same time she is creating a false impression about the strength of her army by utilizing her temporary success over the Roumanians, who lack experience in the conduct of modern warfare."

Arguing that the allies are entitled to choose a favorable hour for peace negotiations, just as Germany chose a favorable hour for declaring war, the order says:

"This time has not yet arrived. The enemy has not been driven out of the provinces he has occupied. Russia's attainment of the tasks created by the war—regarding Constantinople and the Dardanelles as well as the creation of a free Poland from all three of her now incomplete tribal districts—has not yet been guaranteed. To conclude peace at this moment would mean failure to utilize the fruits of the untold trials of the heroic Russian troops and fleet. These trials and the stilling as well as the memory of those noble sons of Russia who have fallen on the battlefield do not permit of thought of peace until final victory over our enemies. Who dares to think that he who brought about war shall have it in his power to conclude the war at any time he likes?"

In conclusion, the Emperor, expressing confidence that no Russian soldier would desire peace until the enemy had been expelled from Russian soil and had given guarantee to prevent a possible repetition of a treacherous attack, says:

"If we are firm in the certainty of our victory, and the All-Highest will bless our arms, and will cover them afresh with glory and give us peace worthy of your heroic deeds, my glorious troops, a peace for your memory, which will be sacred to them."

HUNS MUST TURN IN OLD SHOES.

London, Cable.—A Reuter despatch from Amsterdam says that the latest German papers contain the Federal Council's regulations regarding shoes and clothing for 1917. They prescribe that only two pairs of so-called "shoes de luxe" will be sold on the turning in of cast off, but still wearable pairs. The utilization of cast-off clothing is to be entrusted to communities which have a monopoly for the purchase of these articles. The exchange of old for new articles will be allowed only through tickets.

BRITISH LABOR ON U. S. COURSE

Ben Tillett Talks Plainly of American Action.

Not Acceptable as a War Mediator.

Chicago, Report.—Ben Tillett, noted British agitator and labor leader, has granted an interview, which the Chicago Herald prints, to William Hard in London. He said:

"If there is any country the British workman does not think enough of to want advice from it's yours."

"We don't hate America," he said, "but we hate America's present conduct. Germany has desolated Serbia and Belgium. The only peace is to get Germany out of Belgium and Serbia. To do this the United States has not spent a dollar or a man. We will not listen to a people who are always talking about peace and never doing anything to get peace."

"I don't mean that the United States should fight. But the United States might at least have thrown into the scales of this conflict the weight of its solemn protest against the awful and brutal and beastly attacks on Serbia and Belgium."

"The United States was the greatest neutral. It had all the opportunity to raise a voice to check the militarism that took Europe into war. Now, does it suppose that it is going to be welcomed when it tries to raise a voice against the anti-militarism that are going to take Europe into peace?"

Tillett told of a visit to Germany before the war, when he attended a meeting of Labor men. There was to be a resolution brought forward about war. He said:

"There were many British in favor of it and some French leaders. I was in favor of it."

"It was a resolution declaring that if ever a war broke out in Europe the working class of every country concerned should at once go on a general upheaval strike. Industry would be tied up. The war would have to stop. Well, what happened at that meeting? When that resolution was reached there was not one German who was even willing to discuss it, and worse, when it came to a vote there was not one hand raised to vote for it, not one."

"I went to the leader and I said, 'This is all your Kaiser wants to know. All that he wants to know is that there is not one of you who dare even to say a word or raise a hand for a resolution adopting the one and only practical way in which the working class can ever stop a war.'"

"But we are Germans," they said. "We are not allowed to take part in any such resolutions."

"He (the Kaiser) started a war one month afterward, and the leaders of the German working class in the Reichstag, while the British Labor party was still appealing for peace, voted to give credits to the Kaiser to break the bodies and souls of the people of Belgium. They tricked us, and they tricked the working class of France, and they tricked and massacred the working class of Belgium. Tell Oswald Garrison Villard that we are not sick of this war, and we never will be sick of this war till we put down that kind of trickery and conspiracy and beastliness in Europe."

"One thing more. We don't want mediation at all. But if we did want mediation, would we want it from a country like yours, all full of Germans and all full of daily plots by Germans? What do you think of that?"

ALLIES GUARD OCEAN ROUTES

New York despatch.—The Herald this morning publishes the following: For some days skippers of transatlantic and coastwise steamers have been bringing to New England reports of strange appearing craft that were making their way westward. They made no reply to signals and could not be approached. They steered a zigzag course and were described variously as of the fashion of merchantmen, transports, light cruisers and even of submarines. Picked together, these reports filled in with the suspicion, now apparently confirmed, of shipping men.

The commerce protectors are described as large and powerful, but incapable of fast speed. They were designed, it is said, to meet the German U-boat danger, and in anticipation of an attempted raid off the Canadian coast similar to that made by the U-53 off Nantucket, on October 8th. The Admiralty, it is said, determined to make a possible another such raid, and the fleet of commerce protectors was the fruition of the plan then formulated.

ROYALTY VISITS CANADIANS.

London, Eng. cable.—The King and Queen, Princess Mary and Princes Henry and George, visited the King George Hospital. Their Majesties spoke in French to some of the French-Canadians, took a special interest in spinal and paralysis cases, and asked many questions of the capable of fast speed. They were designed, it is said, to meet the German U-boat danger, and in anticipation of an attempted raid off the Canadian coast similar to that made by the U-53 off Nantucket, on October 8th. The Admiralty, it is said, determined to make a possible another such raid, and the fleet of commerce protectors was the fruition of the plan then formulated.

Many a man has come back, in spite of the fact that he has burned his bridges behind him.

SOMME FIGHT IS ENDED, HUNS SAY

Germans Claim the Allies' Attempt is a Failure.

New Defences Stronger Than Those Lost.

Berlin wireless.—The almost complete cessation of the fighting on the Somme front during the past four weeks has enabled the Germans to complete a new system of trenches along the whole front, says the military critic of the semi-official Overseas News Agency in an article to-day. He declares the great battle that began on July 1st now has been considered to have been terminated, and asserts that the fact of the Germans being enabled to reconstruct their line means that all the efforts and losses of the five months' offensive by the Entente forces were in vain, as if it is desired to resume the attack it must be begun all over again in the beginning.

"As to the new defences, the writer says they have been perfected to such a degree that even the foremost trenches are now protected by barbed wire, with the trenches holding them occupying deep ditches and having adequately protected communication trenches. Moreover, he asserts, the new defensive lines are stronger than those of July 1, as "behind the first line trenches, which were constructed under hostile artillery fire, are more than a dozen of the strongest sort of defensive lines, which have been built absolutely without interference and with great care."

As a further sign of the exhaustion of the offensive the writer notes a let-up in the air activity of the Entente, although German squadrons had been carrying out raids toward the west.

Regarding the Roumanian campaign, the military critic points out that navigation on the Danube for the Russians has been definitely stopped with the occupation of Tulcea by the Bulgarians, leaving the Russians only the railroad line to Ioni and Jassy, while the Russian troops in Dobruja have been driven into the extreme western corner of the province.

INSTRUCTIONS TO GERMAN PRESS

London, Eng. cable.—A Reuter despatch from Amsterdam to-day says: "German newspapers are being instructed to declare that the Somme battle has now been finally finished. They state that the German position is now stronger than on July 1, and that behind the foremost German lines are more than a dozen very strong defence lines."

BRITISH MADE TRENCH RAIDS

Good Results Obtained Around Armentieres.

Airmen Also Bombed Works of Enemy.

London, Eng. cable.—The official report from British headquarters in France to-night reads:

"Some 50 Germans approached our lines Monday night in the neighborhood of Les Boeufs. Eighteen of them were taken prisoner; the remainder suffered heavy casualties from our machine gun fire."

"Monday night we entered trenches northeast of Armentieres and drove off an enemy working party. The enemy's positions east of Ploegsteert were also raided; casualties were inflicted upon the enemy and prisoners were secured."

"In the neighborhood of Les Boeufs, in the direction of the King's Road, the enemy trenches were shelled by the enemy trenches during the day with satisfactory results."

"At other places along the front artillery activity has continued. On the night of Dec. 24-25 our aeroplanes carried out successful bombing operations on places of military importance behind the enemy's lines."

NO REST FOR HUNS IN WEST

Allies Gave Enemy No Rest On Christmas.

Germans Short of Fresh Troops—Morale Weak.

London, Eng. cable.—Heavy artillery and minor infantry activity continued along the west front during Christmas night and to-day. All idea of a Christmas truce was abandoned by the Germans when the sharp patrol assaults with which the British and French troops began the day were kept up till midnight without a breathing spell.

The constant hammering at the vulnerable spots in their defences evidently is taking effect on the nerves of the German troops. Never knowing where the attack is coming from and whether it means a small operation or another big push, such as Nivelles, victory on the Meuse, has prepared them for the Kaiser's soldiers are obtaining little relaxation from the fearful strain of trench warfare.

Prisoners taken by the allied troops testify to the embarrassing lack of fresh troops behind the German lines. Not only are the soldiers pushed to the limit of endurance when they occupy the trenches, but their relief from duty is steadily being cut short for want of troops to take their places, according to reliable reports from the front.

The only members of the allied air forces to celebrate Christmas in their pilot seats were ten French fliers, who poured shells on the enemy's posts at Neule, Ourscamp and Chapre.

From talks I have had with English officers here on furlough for the holidays I am convinced that the German morale has suffered severely within the last month, and that nothing will prevent the allied armies on the west front from smashing forward along a considerable front and forcing a corresponding retirement of the enemy along the entire line.

"What has been accomplished by the Anglo-French forces can be done again," said an officer to me. "We are organized, and we have sufficient artillery for another push along a wider front. We will be able to break through along a line of, say, seven miles, capture guns and consolidate ourselves in a position to menace the entire German front. This will force the enemy to retire generally to a position which will straighten their line."

TEUTON DRIVE SLOWING DOWN

Russ Reinforcements in Roumania Now in Range.

Bulgars Lose Heavily in the Dobruja.

London, Eng. cable.—Petrograd despatches to the Times say: There are indications that a German advance northeast of Bucharest is losing momentum. Each day gained enables Russian reinforcements to come within striking distance, thus helping to hold the present frontward and southward of Filipesti, 30 miles from Braila.

Yesterday's reports of the situation in Dobruja contain an interesting account of the fighting at Lake Babag, where the Russians scored an important success over the Bulgarians, who were trying to turn our left flank. The enemy was driven back into the marshes and most of the attacking column perished in the swampy region. Dobruja probably is destined to play an important part in the forthcoming operations. For three winters the delta has not been ice-bound, and if this state of affairs recurs this year it will be of much advantage to our allies.

According to Berlin despatches in Northern Wallachia, along the southern Moldavian border, and in Dobruja the Teutonic allies continue to make gains over the Russians and Roumanians. Thirty miles southwest of Braila the invaders have captured the town of Filipesti, and west of Rimnik Sarat are on the offensive. In this latter region during the last few days 5,500 Russians have been made prisoners.

FIERCE BATTLE RAIZING.

To-day's Petrograd statement reads: "The enemy is bombarding with an intense artillery fire the regions of the villages of Planik, Maniuf and Gukalovce forest. South of Brzezany the enemy is directing his fire along the heights occupied by us east of the villages of Lipicadolina and Ristelnik."

The sources of the River Rinnik the enemy pressed back our advanced posts, which withdrew to the main position.

"Throughout the day the enemy, with considerable forces, made a number of attacks on the Filipesti-Lichkotanka front, which were repulsed with great losses to him. The fighting was especially fierce in the village of Filipesti, which is being set afire by the enemy artillery, we evacuated."

"In the Dobruja there was an exchange of fire by patrols."

SNUB FOR HOLLAND.

German Answer So Insolent It Must be Altered.

Amsterdam Cable.—The telegraph says it has reason to believe that Germany's reply to Holland's note regarding the deportation of Belgian workmen is so insolent in such terms that it was inadvisable to communicate it to the Dutch Parliament, and that the Government has requested Berlin to alter the reply in such a manner that it may be presented to the Parliament.

The Dutch Government last month instructed its Berlin representative to notify Germany that the Belgian deportations had caused a painful impression in Holland. A Rotterdam impression in Holland. A Rotterdam impression in Holland. A Rotterdam impression in Holland.

Despatches to-day view there, forecasting that the Allies would not discuss peace terms until they stood in military possession of territory they claim attracted much attention.

MORE GOLD FROM OTTAWA.

New York despatch.—With only three business days of the year remaining after to-day, gold to the amount of $631,300,000 has been imported into the United States from all sources during 1917. This includes a fresh consignment of $1,600,000 from Canada, deposited at the Philadelphia mint to the account of J. F. Morgan & Company.

The total of gold imports was about up to $635,350,000 with the arrival at the assay office here to-day of $8,000,000 from Canada consigned to the same firm.

NO TERMS YET FROM THE HUNS AS TO PEACE

German Reply Again Offers Nothing Real On Which to Confer.

THE ALLY ANSWER

Will Refuse to Negotiate Until Something Definite Comes.

Washington despatch.—Germany's reply to President Wilson's note, received to-day, and is regarded here as having advanced the peace movement another step despite the fact that it disappoints in not meeting his suggestion for an avowal of terms.

The Roumanian German's reply receives among the Entente Allies, whose statesmen have publicly declared against such a programme, now becomes the point upon which a further move is hinged. The German note is the prelude to a series of carefully considered delicate moves in the great game of world diplomacy, all possibly leading to an approach for a real discussion of peace terms on grounds which all the belligerents may feel can place them at no disadvantage.

This is the official view of Germany's reply so far as it has been formulated on the basis of the official text.

Neutral diplomatic quarters, too, regarded the note as a step toward peace, and rather leaned to the view that Germany might follow it with a confidential communication of some sort outlining her terms.

The view of the Entente ally Embassies, frankly expressed, was that the note was not an answer to President Wilson's communication, but rather a document for discussion with Germany and in neutral countries with the object of moulding opinion to place the responsibility for continuing the war on the Entente.

It was everywhere agreed that the principal sticking-point was the lack of a definite statement of terms such as President Wilson said, and such as Lloyd George declared the Allies would require if they were not to put "their heads in a noose with the rope end in the hands of the Germans." It is not beyond the realm of diplomacy, however, to find a way to bridge that difficult a chasm. Germany is not regarded as a block to the negotiations, although it makes them exceedingly difficult.

Germany's declaration that she regards the work of securing the world against future wars as a work to be taken up after the present conflict is not regarded with a diversity of opinion.

Germany's proposal for "an immediate meeting of delegates at a neutral place" is received as admittedly much more specific than the original proposal to "enter forthwith into peace negotiations." It is regarded as a step toward peace, despite the repeated declarations of allied statements that it was impossible without a statement of Germany's terms. They expect these two positions, apparently far apart to be reconciled by the art of diplomacy.

How far the United States can or will be concerned in that can only be decided by President Wilson. It is almost assumed that Germany expects the United States to inform her enemies of her reply.

Two features of the note bedeviled the situation slightly and caused some concern among officials here. The first was the giving out of the text in Berlin before it had opportunity to reach Washington, and the other was the connection of the reply with the suggestion that soundings be taken. This alone is singled out by those who regard the reply as a step toward peace, despite the repeated declarations of allied statements that it was impossible without a statement of Germany's terms. They expect these two positions, apparently far apart to be reconciled by the art of diplomacy.

SETTLED OUT OF COURT

By M. QUAD
Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Just at what hour and minute Deacon Bradley fell in love with the Widow Ludden has been preserved on the records. It was twenty minutes after 2 o'clock on a summer's day.

The deacon was a farmer and a widower, living about two miles from the village of Strongville. He had been a widower for three years and had no idea of falling in love and marrying again. His daughter, Martha, kept house for him.

The deacon was out mowing grass from the fence corner when his scythe blade struck a stone, and the point was broken off about six inches. When it was discovered what had taken place the deacon shouted out:

"Cosh all hemlock! But I went and broke my scythe, and I'll have to pay a dollar for a new one! I've got to get even with somebody to pay for this."

His daughter sat on the back steps in the shade, and she laughed at his words. When he returned to the house he was asked:

"Goin' to town to get a new blade, pap?"

"No, I hain't," he replied. "I'm goin' to town to ask the Widder Ludden to marry me."

"Awful sudden, isn't it?"

"Yes, pretty sudden."

The Widow Ludden was not wealthy, but she had enough to get along with. She was peeling potatoes at the kitchen door when she saw him drive up.

She noticed that he looked rather spruce and wondered what business could have brought him there. She soon found out. The deacon came around the house, and after a few remarks about the dry weather and the tater bugs he blurted out:

"Widder, I hit a stone with the p'int of my scythe this afternoon and broke the darned old tool beyond repair. At the minute I hit the stone I thought of you. Rather curious, don't you think?"

"Yes, it was rather odd," replied the widow.

"I kinder took it that it was the hand of Providence. You see, widder, you are alone in the world, and so am I."

"Yes," sighed the widow.

"How much better it would be if we were together instead of apart?"

"Deacon Bradley, that sounds to me like an offer of marriage, but surely you don't mean it so?"

"Darned if I don't!" was the exclamation. She dropped a potato.

"Well," said the widow as she regained the potato. "You might as well get into your buggy and drive back home and forget all about the hand of Providence. I don't believe that Providence works that way."

"Waal, maybe she don't," muttered the deacon, and he walked out to the street and climbed into his vehicle and rode off home.

When the deacon had called five or six times more the Widow Ludden spoke to the constable about it and complained that the deacon was annoying her. The constable warned the deacon to haul off the chase, but received the reply:

"I am doin' nothin' agin the law. I want to marry the widder, and I am doin' my best to win her."

At length he took to calling nights—that is, he walked up and down in front of the house and even in the garden. Of course, all this provoked gossip, and the widow got so angry about it that she had him brought before the justice of the peace for making a nuisance of himself. When the justice had heard both sides of the story he said:

"My friends, I don't like to make a court case out of this. Deacon Bradley, do you think it is fair to annoy Mrs. Ludden in this way?"

"Land o' love, jedge, but I wouldn't annoy her for the world!" was the reply. "Why, I'd have my right hand cut off afore I'd do any such thing. She don't seem to understand how much I love her."

"Widow," said the judge as he turned to her. "Did the deacon ever court you?"

"No, sir," was the reply. "He came in slambang and said he ought to marry."

"He did, eh? That's no way to win a woman. If he had come courtin' in the regular way, as I and most men had to court, would you have looked upon him with more favor?"

The widow mused for a moment and then replied:

"He never even squeeze my hand!"

"But I wanted to bad enough!" half shouted the deacon.

"I wanted to squeeze and squeeze, but I didn't have the right way!"

"You are an honest, upright man. You are well off. You are lonely. The only trouble with you is that you don't know how to court a woman."

And then he turned to the widow and said:

"Widow Ludden, it seems that the deacon is a little slow, but I am satisfied that he loves you and will make you a good husband. Why don't you try it all over again and see if you can't come out right?"

The two left the judge's office in company, and that very night they began all over again, and in less than six weeks there was a wedding, and the justice said to himself:

"The law may be a mighty good thing, but common sense is a heap better."

Advice to Young Writers.

Every few days a letter comes from some young man about to dip his ankles into the chill though bracing pool of literature. "Would you mind giving me some advice?" he asks, and, flattered as we are, we always say truthfully that we have none. We are going to tell the next young man to write not to please a mythical public or, worse, an editor who is trying to please a business office that thinks it is trying to please a public, but to write to please himself, to write what he himself would enjoy reading. He may be astonished to find how many persons there are with tastes like his.

Lacked Imagination.

"I have here an idea for a play," said the moving picture author to the producer. "In the first reel an oil tank blows up, in the second an entire railroad train falls into a gorge, in the third a huge steamer sinks at sea, in the fourth a volcanic eruption destroys a city, and in the fifth we have a battle calling for 10,000 supernumeraries."

"Entirely too small for me to fool with," said the producer, doing some rapid figuring with a pencil. "That play wouldn't cost more than $5,000,000 to stage, and I'm not considering anything that involves an expenditure of less than $20,000,000. The trouble with you authors is that you have no imagination."—Judge.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

Like most men who have things pretty much their own way in this world, Sir Frederic was of a jealous disposition. All his life he had not just what he wanted—a mother who worshipped him—servants who came, and with haste, at his beck and call—neighbors who looked up to him and of whom he looked down—money in abundance—a fine estate—entirely untroubled—he had but to set his heart upon a thing to obtain it.

And he had set his heart upon Signa. He was hard hit the first evening he saw her—all the harder that she had taken so little notice of him; he felt still more sure that he loved her after her visit to the Park, but now after this visit to the Park, when he stepped in between them, he felt certain that he loved her passionately, and that he must and would have her.

The thought that the girl he, Sir Frederic, loved, the future mistress of the Park, should spend the day with this unknown and opera-singer the handsome man in his own mind—Sir Frederic's stigmatized Hector Warren's calm, easy bearing—was simply intolerable, maddening. With a hasty stride of his long legs he reached the lane, and jumping on to a gate, he had left behind him the high-bred, struck his spurs into the high-bred animal, and rode home full pet, Hector Warren's cool smile and quietly haughty voice haunting him all the way, and making his self-love ache worse than his bruised hand.

Flinging his bridle to a groom who Sir Frederic entered the house—a grand place, as Signa had said—and was passing through to his room to dress for dinner, when he heard Lady Blight's voice calling him from the drawing-room.

He hesitated a moment, then pushed the half-open door wide, and entered.

Lady Blight looked up anxiously; she had seen him from the window dismount, and knew that something had gone wrong.

"How long you have been, dear," she said, glancing up from her book with that smile with which she was so chary to the rest of the world, but lavished on her adored son.

"Yes," he said, morosely, dropping into a chair, and thrusting his hands in his pockets—"yes, I have been waiting—at the Rectory."

"I thought you had gone there," remarked Lady Blight, softly.

She flushed and looked down.

"Yes, I've been there. I went to inquire after Miss Grenville. It was the proper thing to do."

"Of course, dear," she assented. "And she is none the worse for her visit to us, I hope?"

"I don't know—I didn't ask her," he said, shortly. "She was out; she had been out all day with Mr. Warren."

Lady Blight raised her eyebrows with a look of surprised disapproval. "But not alone, Frederic?"

"As good, or as bad, almost," he said, angrily. "Archie alone was with them."

"Dear me!" said Lady Blight; and there was strong disapproval in her tone.

"It—it was an accident, it seems," he said, sullenly—"at least so she thinks. Of course she wouldn't say what wasn't true."

Lady Blight looked down in silence.

"Of course she wouldn't," he repeated, angrily. "She thinks that it was an accident, but I dare say he could have prevented it. They went out in a boat, got caught in a storm, and went to St. Clare's, where they were kept by the storm. At least, he says they were kept."

"Dear me!" said Lady Blight again. "Sir Frederic beat the devil's tattoo with his big feet on the Turkey carpet."

"I can't think how she could have allowed him to take her," he said, angrily. "I suppose it was his sheer impudence that did it."

"Who is this Mr. Warren? You mean the man you met the other night, don't you?"

"Yes, I wish somebody would tell me," he replied, between his teeth. "It is my opinion that he is an adventurer; Lady Rookwell declared that he was an opera-singer or something of that sort, and I'd stake my life—my life she was right, for all the airs he gives himself."

"It is very strange," said Lady Blight. "I am surprised that she should have gone with him. She did not strike me as that sort of girl."

"What on earth do you mean by that sort of girl?" he asked, irritably.

"I mean a sort of girl who would commit an indiscretion of that sort, dear," exclaimed the fond mother, meekly. "I was so favorably impressed by her when she was here, perhaps, you know, Frederic, I liked her very much."

"It wasn't her fault," he said, sullenly. "It was his doing. I'm sure of that. He planned and schemed it all beforehand!" and but for his mother's presence, he would have added: "Curses him!"

"Did you see her, dear?"

"Yes, I—I waited; I thought I had better wait," he said, with a flush.

"Mrs. Podswell was anxious, ill, in fact; and I—I didn't know what had happened to her," and he turned his face away.

Lady Blight looked up at him and sighed. She knew that he had set his mind upon the girl in deep earnest, and she smothered a sigh.

"I—I don't think I would suffer myself to be put out, dear," she said, timidly. "After all, it wasn't her fault, as you say, and—and—it doesn't matter."

"Doesn't matter!" he exclaimed. "Doesn't matter that—that she should come from heaven knows where?"

"Of course it matters, in a sense, dear," said Lady Blight. "It is very annoying, but—but, Frederic, if you are quite sure of what?" she demanded.

"Quite sure of what?" he demanded. "Quite sure of what she was going to do?"

"That you have made up your mind, dear. You have seen so little of her, only twice, three times—"

"That doesn't signify," he said, huskily. "It's all the same as if I had known her for years. If you mean, am I in love with her—yes, I am."

And he frowned, and clinched his hands in his pockets. "I have quite made up my mind."

Lady Blight smothered another sigh. She had hoped for something different in the way of a daughter-in-law than this Signa Grenville, whose past was not altogether brilliant, and who had rather little or fortune to recommend her. She had hoped to see him marry even higher, if there was anything higher, and in her pride she doubted it, than himself. A peer's daughter need not have turned up her nose at the prospect of being Lady Blight, but if he had fallen in love with the dairy-maid and wanted to marry her, she knew that he would have to have his way.

"Well, dear," she said, gently; "I have nothing to say against her—"

"Against her!"

"No, certainly not, Frederic. It is not necessary that your wife should have money or title; it would be better."

"I don't want either," he said, sullenly.

"No," she assented, with a proud, haughty smile. "So that that doesn't matter. And she is very beautiful and—and—distinguished-looking, I am sure. The Grenvilles are an old family."

He made an impatient gesture.

"It would be all the same if they were not," he said, huskily. "I—I have made up my mind."

"Then, dear, you need not be uneasy, I think," she said, with a touch of proud confidence. "And as to this Mr. Warren, I should not let him disturb me in any way."

He is a mere nobody, and quite poor, it appears. It is not likely that she would hesitate in her choice between him and you."

He bit his lip and stared out of the window, but his face cleared somewhat. After all, it was not likely. He could not have anything to fear from the rivalry of such a man, and yet—

"Even if she were taken by this man's manners—Lady Rookwell was here this morning and said he was rather good-looking."

"He is very good-looking; he is handsome," he said, with savage candor.

"Well, well, she may have taken a slight fancy."

"Don't," he said, almost livid with jealousy. "It is impossible. I don't believe it."

She looked up, and her lip trembled. How certainly he must love her—this girl whom he had seen just three times.

"I don't say, I merely suppose it, I won't go even so far as that; don't be impatient with me, dear," and the proud eyes filled with sudden tears.

"I beg you pardon," he said. "I am out of sorts and upset. Of course there was nothing in it. She cannot help it, and—and—"

"It will all come right," she said, eagerly, smilingly. "She is not the girl to hesitate between you. Don't think any more about him. She must come here again; I will go and see her myself. It will all come right, dear."

"It must," he said, hoarsely, gnawing at his lip. "I don't know what has come to me. I have never felt like this before. The sight of that fellow drove me mad. I—I hate him."

"Frederic!" she murmured.

"I cannot help it," he said, fiercely. "I hate the sound of his voice. How dare he come here and—and—hang about the whole day, and I sitting here waiting? And when she came in, she scarcely spoke to me. I don't think she wished me good-day, even! Scarcely knew that I was in the room, and he paced the floor with fierce, awkward strides."

"My dear, I do think you are troubling yourself unnecessarily. Remember who and what you are!"

"I will," with an air of determination. "I will. I forget it when I am with her—I feel like a clod; but I will remember it, and I'll make him feel it."

The dinner-bell rang as he spoke.

"Will you see Miss Signa if she will be kind enough to pour out the tea for me, Mary?" she says; and when Signa comes into the room she is received with a smile, instead of the moans and frowns she is expecting.

"I am so sorry to trouble you, my dear," says Mrs. Podswell.

"And so you had quite an adventure, my dear?" says the rector, blandly, but avoiding her eye. "I—ahem—I'm sure we ought to be much obliged to Mr. Warren for taking care of you."

"Mr. Kent saved our lives," says Signa quietly.

"I must walk down to-morrow morning and thank him, really," says the rector.

"Is it so late?" he said, passing his hand over his forehead. "I didn't know the time. I shall not be long."

"Don't hurry, dear," she said, gently. "It is of no consequence. I will tell Parlor to keep the dinner back. Don't hurry."

Dinner is late at the rectory as well as at the park, for at half-past six the rector has not returned, and Signa and her aunt spend a very uncomfortable half hour of it. Mrs. Podswell would have liked to have said some unpleasant things about Signa's adventure; but there is a quiet dignity in Signa's bearing, a steady look in the beautiful eyes that would warn Mrs. Podswell that it would be scarcely safe; so she contents herself with meaning faintly at intervals and bearing herself as if she were a deeply injured individual, and was suffering untold anguish by the shock Signa's absence has inflicted on her.

Signa tries a little conversation, and attempts to enter into particulars of their trip, but Mrs. Podswell will scarcely speak, and at last Signa takes a little escape into silence—not reading, but thinking of the rain and the storm and the fire in the city, but most of all of that sudden pallor in the face and light in Hector Warren's eyes as he drank out of the cup.

Three-quarters of an hour behind rather than the rector comes in, looking much as if he had been through a storm, and most of all of that sudden pallor in the face and light in Hector Warren's eyes as he drank out of the cup.

He looks at her sideways, with a shadow of expression in his small eyes.

"We—ahem—mustn't do anything rash, my dear," he says. "Ahem! Old Brown is dead."

Mr. Brown is, or was, the Vicar of Ridgely, a small village, within a mile and a half of Northwell.

"Oh," says Aunt Podswell, inquiringly. "He was very old. But what has that to do with Mr. Hector Warren and Signa?"

He coughs and folds his hands, looking down at the carpet, thoughtfully.

"The—er—living of Ridgely is in Lord Delamere's gift, my dear. I was thinking that—ahem!—as it is so near, his lordship might feel inclined to add it to this; we could manage it very well, you know. By which he means that the already overworked curate could be made to do most of the duty at Ridgely, while he, the rector, drew the stipend."

Mrs. Podswell nods eagerly.

"Of course you could. It ought to belong to Northwell. Lord Delamere wouldn't refuse you, I should think."

"It's a very good thing," he says, in a meek voice—five hundred or thereabouts. I—ahem—of course, I should like to let this Mr. Warren see that his visits here are not welcome, but, you see, my dear—"

"I must write to Lord Delamere and complain," says Aunt Amelia, shrewdly.

"Just so," assents the rector. "I—ahem—should be very sorry to offend Lord Delamere, very sorry, indeed, and we must remember that he sent the young man here. After all, perhaps it might have been an accident; we must not be uncharitable, my dear."

"Certainly not, Joseph," with a long sigh.

"There was a storm, a very heavy storm, you know, and there might have been danger in attempting to come back across the bar. I think, my dear, we will say nothing more about it."

"Just as you please, of course, Joseph," she assents; "you know best. Perhaps—with a mean of humility—I was rather rash this afternoon."

"You didn't—ahem—quarrel with him?" he asks, in alarm.

"I was very much upset," she says, coloring, "but you can soon see it right again. After all, it was danger we ought to be very grateful to him for taking care of her. No doubt!"—spitefully—"she was only too ready to go wherever he wanted her."

"I'll set it right, my dear," he says, coughing. "As you, with your usual good sense, observe, we really ought to be grateful to him. I wonder whether he knows Lord Delamere's address. He—ahem!—might say a word in my favor, as he is such an intimate friend of his lordship's. We could manage both livings very well, indeed."

There is silence for a moment, then she rings the bell.

"Will you see Miss Signa if she will be kind enough to pour out the tea for me, Mary?" she says; and when Signa comes into the room she is received with a smile, instead of the moans and frowns she is expecting.

"I am so sorry to trouble you, my dear," says Mrs. Podswell.

"And so you had quite an adventure, my dear?" says the rector, blandly, but avoiding her eye. "I—ahem—I'm sure we ought to be much obliged to Mr. Warren for taking care of you."

"Mr. Kent saved our lives," says Signa quietly.

"I must walk down to-morrow morning and thank him, really," says the rector.

Joints Quit Aching Soreness beats It Away

NO MORE STIFFNESS, PAIN OR MISERY IN YOUR BACK OR SIDE OR LIMBS!

Wonderful "Nerviline" is the Remedy.

A marvelous pain reliever. Not an ordinary liniment—just about fifty times more powerful, more penetrating, more pain subduing than any thick, oily or ammonia liniment. Nerviline fairly eats up the pain and stiffness in chronic rheumatic joints, gives quick relief to those throbbing wounds and never burns or even stains the skin.

"Rheumatism kept my joints swollen and sore for ten years. My right knee joint was often too painful to allow me to walk. In this crippled, tortured condition I found Nerviline a blessing. Its warm, soothing action brought relief I had given up hoping for. I rubbed on quantities of Nerviline and improved steadily. I also took Ferrozone at mealtime in order to purify and enrich my blood. I am today well and can resume my treatment most conscientiously."

(Signed) Prince Albert.

Not an ache or pain in the muscles or joints that Nerviline won't cure. It's wonderful for lumbago and sciatica; for neuralgia, stiff neck, earache and toothache. Nerviline is a family wonder. Best family liniment known and largely used for the past forty years. Sold by dealers everywhere. 25c per bottle. Refuse a substitute, take only "Nerviline."

"Sit down, my dear sir," says the rector, in his blandest manner. "You have come just in time for a cup of tea. Ahem! I must call you to-morrow on your—ahem!—diggings, and he laughs at the slang expression, "to thank you for your exertions on behalf of my young people."

A CAUSE OF INDIGESTION

People Who Complain of This Trouble Usually Are Thin-Blooded.

Thin blooded people usually have stomach trouble. They seem to recognize the fact that thin blood is the cause of the trouble, but it is. In fact, thin, impure blood is the most common cause of stomach trouble; it affects the digestion very quickly. The glands that furnish the digestive fluid are diminished in their activity; the stomach muscles are weakened; and there is a loss of nerve force. In this state of health, nothing will more quickly restore the appetite, the digestion and normal nutrition than good, rich, red blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills act directly on the blood, making it rich and red, and this enriched blood strengthens weak nerves, stimulates tired muscles and awakens the normal activity of the glands.

Improving health is an improved appetite, and soon the effect of these blood-making pills is evident throughout the system. You find that what you eat does not distress you, and that you are strong and vigorous instead of irritable and listless. This is proved by the case of Mrs. J. Harris, Gerrard street, Toronto, who says:

"About three years ago I was seized with a severe attack of indigestion and vomiting. My food seemed to turn sour as soon as I ate it, and I would fall on the floor after vomiting. I tried a lot of home remedies, but they did not help me. I went to a doctor, who gave me some powder, but it was instead of better. This made me worse for nearly two months and by that time my stomach was in such a weak state that I could not keep down a drink of water, and felt that I was not worth living. I was not married at this time, and one Sunday evening on my way to church with my husband I was taken with a bad spell on the street. He took me to a drug store, where the clerk fixed up something to take, and I intended to get a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. By the end of the first week I could eat some improved food from the use of the Pills, and I gradually continued taking them until every symptom of the trouble was gone, and I was again enjoying the best of health. These Pills are now my standby and I tell all my friends what they did for me."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

PRETTY AT THIRTY-FIVE.

How Beauty Increases With More Knowledge of Life.

"Thirty-five and pretty?" queried Sweet Seventeen, with dubious uplifting of eyebrows. "I think thirty-five horrid. How can one be pretty after thirty?" To be more than twenty something-or-other means the end of things for a woman, the very word 'thirty' has a menacing sound. Why, one must almost be getting gray."

The man regarded her with a smiling indulgence. "You are forgetting cultivation," said he, "and cultivation puts age out of the question. In these times 'thirty' spells nothing to a woman. The modern cultured woman has a charm beyond compare, and what matters thirty, thirty-five, even thirty-seven. Sweet Seventeen, you small tot of innocence. For women are as the flowers—some of you sweet, gentle, fragrant as the violet; elegant and stately as the lily; and even, I grieve to say, handsome and flaunting as the poppy with poison in its heart. You, Sweet Seventeen, are yet but the smallest of the white violet buds."

"I don't see what that has to do with a woman being thirty-five and old," pouted Sweet Seventeen; "and I don't want to be lectured. When I'm thirty-five I shall quite have left off caring about being pretty, or thinking about clothes, or—or, even anything that I like to think about now."

"It is impossible," said the man, very slowly and ponderously, placing his hat, and smoothing out the fingers of his gloves. "It is possible for a woman to be at the zenith of her beauty even after thirty-five. Many of the lovely women of history have been notoriously beautiful much later in life than that. You are the beginning of a far, far lovelier flower. You are at the beginning of life, and life is beautiful; absorb its wonders and reflect its glories."

"Admire all that is given unto you to admire. Colors, flowers, sweet odors, curves, grace, the loveliness of nature, of children and all young things. Regard them with an appreciating mind, and realize the appeal they make to your heart against that tends to lower your standard of what is right. You may dwindle from the freshness of a young racehorse to the unkempt depression of the average peder's donkey if you neglect your grooming. Don't you see?"

groaned the man, reaching for his hat, "that it is good grooming that keeps a check? Will you let a mean, unclean, discolored life write its ugliness about your face and develop small ailments and a constant grumbling?"

"You know a little learning is a dangerous thing." "I ain't worried," replied Farmer Corntassel. "The professor says Josh ain't even getting that much."—Washington Star.

WOUNDS AND INFECTION.

Fresh Air a Good Healer for Shell Wounds.

The professional healer, like the professional fighter, has found that many of the things he learned in South Africa he has had to unlearn in Flanders. Wounds seldom proved troublesome in the Boer War, because the South Africanveld was almost virgin; but in Belgium and France, where the land has been cultivated for centuries, the gentle germ is always ready to enter the smallest wound and bring about tetanus and other diseases.

At first surgeons were in despair, fearing that much-vaunted antiseptics were of no avail. It required long search and experiment before methods of overcoming new difficulties could be discovered. Then, owing to the lavish use of high-explosive shells, wounds are more complicated and more difficult to keep clean, while the pointed bullet works more harm than the blunt one of the "good old days."

Plenty of fresh air is a food to work marvels, so there is at least one hospital in which the patients lie practically in the open. It has also been found that wounds remain clean if water continually flows over them, so the clever surgeon has constructed little baths which fit over the wound, a supply of warm water impregnated with oxygen continually flowing through.

The Ishmaelites of To-day.

The sons of Ishmael are to-day the Bedouins, who live east of the Jordan and south of the Dead Sea. Their banishment from the society of settled tribes has not seriously hurt them. They are the sturdy sons of the desert, who are so often pictured on their spirited Arab steeds, armed and manly in their careers but alert grace.

But the daughters, the Hagar among the Bedouins, have a harder time of it. The hard work of the tent life falls to them, and they sometimes fight side by side with their picturesque, but lazy and proud husbands and masters.

The real Bedouins were tent-dwellers, and nomads, and neither built huts nor cultivated the ground. But the coming of a few degrees of law and order even in Turkey has caused some Bedouins to settle down to a life under a roof and tilling the fields or tending sheep or goats instead of Arab steeds or ungainly camels.

The Hadari, or settled tribes, are partly nomadic and partly agricultural.

YOUR MISSION.

When once you have conceived and determined your mission let naught arrest your steps. Fulfill it with all your strength; fulfill it whether blest by love or visited by hate, whether strengthened by association with others or in that sad solitude that almost always surrounds the martyr of thought.

Napoleon's Only Wound.

Napoleon was wounded in the course of his military career, though once only. This was before Waterloo on April 23, 1809. He was struck by a grape-shot ball and received a flesh wound, which disconcerted him so little that he mounted his horse, wiping away the blood with a handkerchief. The ball was picked up by an officer, who treasured it so highly that it passed as an heirloom to his children and grandchildren. It now rests in the Musée at Paris.—London Answers.

Youthful at One Hundred.

It is recorded that in Yorkshire, England, in 1501 Henry Jenkins was born. He died in 1670, out off at the age of 169. He remembered well the battle of Flodden Field. This occurred in 1513, when he was twelve years of age. The registries of chancery and other courts show the administration of oaths to him 140 years prior to his death. He gave deposition as witness when he was 157. In his young manhood, when he was a little over 100, he was a remarkable swimmer. The remarkable thing about Henry Jenkins is the fact that he has left behind him no rules of living which would enable others to duplicate his feat.

Pay Up Day In China.

At the Chinese New Year, the houses and other buildings are decked with flowers and the streets are thronged with people who have come out to buy provisions, new clothes and gifts. One good New Year custom in China is that of settling up all debts before the old year has died out. A Chinaman who allows the New Year to dawn before he has settled with his creditors feels himself disgraced. If a Chinaman to whom money is owing is not there to receive it then he is debared from pressing his claims for some months afterward. The New Year is also a great time for housecleaning, by the way.

The Great Philhellene.

There is at least one Englishman for whom Greek affection has never wavered—Lord Byron. Not only is he commemorated in Greece by statues and street names, but his portrait is to be found everywhere, even in the most unlikely places. Mr. W. Miller in his "Greek Life in Town and Country" tells how he came upon a portrait of the poet in a provincial restaurant. The moment he took notice of it "the proprietor, a stout, prosaic looking man, whom no one would have suspected of sentiment, stepped toward the picture, clasped his hands in pathetic gesture and, with a faraway look in his eyes, stood for a time in rapt admiration of the great Philhellene."

The Word "Mizpah."

The word "Mizpah" is the name of several places in Palestine. The one with which its connection is best known, however, is the heap of stones and the pillar set up by Jacob and his brethren as a witness of the covenant between Jacob and Laban. The heap of stones were a boundary and also an altar. The use of the word "Mizpah" as an inscription for memorial rings is based on words occurring in connection with the setting up of the stones by Jacob and his brethren, the covenant with Laban—"The Lord watch between me and thee while we are absent one from the other."

Get Up Right.

Get up right in the morning. Go to bed right at night. Start with joy in your heart, hope in the future, kindliness in your purpose.

If it is a dark day never mind; you will lighten it up. If it is a bright day you will add to the brightness. Give a word of cheer, a kindly greeting and a warm handshake to your friends.

If your enemies look up pass them by, forget and try to forgive.

If all of us would bear in mind that happiness is from within and not from without there would be a well spring of joy in every heart and the sun would shine forever.

Try it.

TODAY'S LIFE.

Dizraeli once said that the most evil one has to endure is the anticipation of calamities that do not happen. The thing to aim at is to live, as far as possible, in the day and for the day.

Bowser Buys Coal

And He Meets With a Dishonest Honest Dealer.

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

The Bowser had eaten dinner. A cheerful fire burned in the grate, and the cat licked her paws as she lay upon the rug.

Outside the house there was a cold north wind and a squal of snow now and then.

Mr. Bowser was half nodding in his sleep when a voice crying out interrupted his contentment. It was Mrs. Bowser's voice, and it was exclaiming loudly:

"There, there; I have forgotten that coal again!"

"Hey! What! Why don't you scare a fellow to death and be done with it?" demanded Mr. Bowser.

"I only said I had forgotten to telephone for some new coal. I suppose it is too late now? All the dealers will have gone home by this time."

"Yes, they must have gone home. Is the coal for the furnace all gone?"

"There may be enough to last tomorrow. I ought to have telephoned early this morning, but I had a hundred different things on my mind."

"Mrs. Bowser, it seems to me that the last two tons of coal went very fast," said Mr. Bowser, as he jabbed at the fire with the poker.

"I know it did, and yet I tried my best to be saving. I don't believe there were two tons of it. I believe you were cheated of at least a quarter of a ton of coal."

"A CHEERFUL FIRE BURNED IN THE GRATE."

"More likely it was half a ton."

"And can't you do anything about it? Other husbands tend to such things. Why don't you, instead of leaving it to me? The coal men will cheat a woman quicker than a man. They know that she won't come to the office to complain about short weight. We are being cheated because you won't see about it."

"Well, I will tell you what I will do," said Mr. Bowser as he suddenly made up his mind. "I will start out in the morning to buy two more tons of coal. I will visit five or six coal offices and let them know I am up to snuff and can't be imposed upon, and we will get the biggest two tons of coal we have had in three years. It will be a little trip that I have often thought of making, but haven't got around to it yet. Yes, by George, we will put a foot down on this short weight business!"

Nothing more was said that evening, although Mrs. Bowser could have added that he had better stop at the grocer's and the butcher's before his trip was over. After breakfast, with the light of a scrap shining in his eyes, Mr. Bowser started out among the dealers in coal. At the first office he entered he said:

"I have come for two tons of coal—furnace coal."

"Certainly, certainly," replied the man. "This weather burns up the coal very fast."

"I want to ask a few questions before you take my order."

"Oh, to be sure," smiled the dealer. "You can ask a dozen questions."

"Can I depend on you sending me 2,000 pounds full weight for a ton?"

"Why, of course. You don't think I would send you less, do you?"

"And it will be clear of slag and slate?"

"As clear as noonday, sir. No one can find fault with our coal in any direction. Full weight, prompt delivery and no slag or slate. What is your address, sir?"

"Didn't I read in the papers a short time ago that you had a contract with the city to supply one of the public schoolhouses and that you were short in tons in the contract and had to make it good?" asked Mr. Bowser.

"Oh, as to that," laughed the dealer, "my neighbor of coal, who has been with me for the last fifteen years, got drunk one day and made a mistake about weights. When my attention was called to the shortage I was only too glad to correct it at once. Shall I send the two tons of coal to your house at once?"

"I am going up the street," replied Mr. Bowser, "and I will stop when I come back and leave the order."

At the next coal office they were weighing a load on the scales as Mr.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

Bowser came along. He cast a look at the weight, and as near as he could figure they were giving 1,850 pounds for a ton. Nevertheless, he went in.

"Good morning, sir," saluted the dealer. "How much coal did you wish to order this morning?"

"That depends somewhat on circumstances," was the reply. "Will you assure me of full weight?"

"Oh, most surely. That is one of the things I pride myself on."

"And clean coal?"

"That is another of the things."

"I just noticed a ton load on your scale, and I saw that it was 150 pounds short, and there was a heap of slag and slate in sight."

The dealer turned very red in the face and rushed out into the yard and was absent three or four minutes. When he returned to tell Mr. Bowser that it was a ton of coal ordered for the house of one of his employees and was sold almost at half price he found his customer was gone. He ran out again and berated the weigher, but it was too late.

Mr. Bowser found the next three dealers courteous, honest men. They gave full weight and sometimes a little more; they sold only clean coal; their aim was to satisfy all customers; they had never had a complaint. The grocer and butcher might give short weight, but never the coal man; his conscience forbade that.

Mr. Bowser extended his trip for two miles without placing his order and finally entered the sixth office.

"How many tons and where to?" asked the dealer as he wet the point of his pencil with his tongue.

"I want two tons of coal, but—"

"But you want to do a little kicking first. Kick away."

"Will you deliver me a full 4,000 pounds?"

"No, sir," was the emphatic reply. "If I deliver 3,700 pounds you might thank your stars."

"But will it be free burning coal?"

"No, sir! There will be the usual amount of slag and slate mixed in."

"But—but—" stammered Mr. Bowser, in his surprise.

"Oh, don't take me for a fool!" said the dealer. "You have doubtless been to other dealers, and they claimed to be honest men and filled you up with promises of full weight and free coal. I am not an honest coal dealer myself, nor am I a liar. No man is in the coal business for his health. We are all driven into dishonesty. I have just received a consignment of 200 tons of coal. It is at least ten tons short. Am I going to make up for the loss, or have my customers got to do it?"

Mr. Bowser did not reply.

"Look here, old man," continued the dealer. "The mine owner cheats his railroad. The railroad cheats the wholesale dealer. The wholesale dealer cheats the retailer. The retailer cheats the consumer. I have six drivers, and every one of them cheats me by selling from his load three or four buckets of coal on every trip he makes. Besides that, there is stealing from a yard, and my watchman sells a barrel or two of coal every night. It is an endless chain of cheating, and they who won't cheat are out of the business after one year."

"But who will I cheat?" asked Mr. Bowser.

"You may cheat the man who shovels the snow off the sidewalk—if you can," was the sobered reply. "At least you will have to cheat somebody or suffer the loss. I am sorry it is so, for I would like to be an honest man, but I can't be, the way things are run. Will you give me your order, sir, and let me cheat you? It might as well be me as any of the others."

"I—I think I will," replied Mr. Bowser. "I have tried honest men long enough. I will make a change and try a dishonest one."

And Mr. Bowser gave his address, paid for the coal and walked out. He was at home when the wagon drove up, and as there was a public scale within two blocks of his house he said to the coal wagon driver:

"Had you just as soon drive over and weigh this coal?"

The driver said he would be delighted, and the load was weighed and the extra weight for the vehicle figured out. There were just 4,150 pounds.

"How does this come?" was asked of the driver.

"Oh, my boss is one of those dishonest coal dealers," was the laughing reply.

And when Mrs. Bowser was told of the strange occurrence she replied:

"Mr. Bowser, you go out and look for a dishonest grocer and butcher, and we will solve the problem of the high cost of living. I knew there was a way to do it if we could only strike it."

"No, boss," replied Erastus Pinky. "That's exactly the place. De house where de sign used to be was tore down, so we had to move it."

The Stranger.

"Who's that stranger, mother, dear? Look! He knows us. ••• Ain't he queer?"

"Hush, my own. Don't talk so wild. He's your father, dearest child."

"He's my father? No such thing! Father died away last spring!"

"Father didn't die, you dub. Father joined a golfing club."

"But they've closed the club, so he has no place to go, you see?"

"No place left for him to roam—That is why he's coming home."

"Kiss him: ••• he won't bite you, child. All them golfing guys look wild!"

A Mighty Mountain Range.

Mount Everest is guarded from approach on either side by Tibet and Nepal, undoubtedly the two most inaccessible countries in the entire earth. The mountain range between Everest and Kanchenjunga contains a series of very high mountains, several of them over 25,000 feet. The lowest of the mountains in this range are higher than St. Elias, in North America.

She Knew Him.

She—You know, Harry, so far as I am concerned, I am only too happy to become your wife, but my father, you know—

He—But what has your father got to do with it? Your father hasn't got to live with me.

She—No, Harry, but you may have to live with father, you know.

Just Like a Woman.

"That clock is two hours slow," said the man of the house when he came home at even started.

"Impossible," said his wife. "I set it only this afternoon. I went over to Mrs. Smith's, next door, and asked her what time it was, and then as soon as she showed me her new gown and gave me a recipe for blackberry jam, I came right home and set the clock to the time she told me."

HER HUMBLE LOVER

Hector Warren looks at him steadily, and a faint smile curves his lips. "My exertions were very slight," he says, "and not worth consideration. But I am sorry that Mrs. Podswell should have suffered so much anxiety."

"My wife has weak nerves, and—ahem!—is much better now," says the rector, apologetically.

"Much better," says the martyr. "I am afraid I was rather hasty this morning. But—with a thin, acid smile—"you must make allowances for an invalid, Mr. Warren."

He inclines his head, and goes up to the table for his cup of tea.

"Sugar?" says Signa, without raising her eyes.

"Please," he says.

It is only a word, but how different is the tone to that which he used a moment ago!

"Thank you. I hope and trust you are none the worse for this morning's adventure?"

"Yes," says Signa. "That question would come better from me!" and she smiles up at him.

He laughs.

"Beyond a rather better appetite than usual, which enables me to thoroughly enjoy Mrs. Thompson's mutton chops as never appreciated mutton chops before, I have felt no effects, and shall not. But I ought to be candid," he says, leaning against the wall in the easy attitude which Signa knows so well by this time. "It was only to offer my apologies, and to gain Mr. and Mrs. Podswell's forgiveness, that I came here to-night"—and he smiles—"I came hoping to gain a little information."

"Information?"

He nods, and takes a letter from his pocket; it is inclosed in one of the small square envelopes of the period, and has an immense coat of arms upon it.

"I found this on my table when I reached home. It is an invitation to dinner from Lady Rookwell."

Signa smiles.

"What is very nice," she says. "But I don't see—"

"On that point I want information? Well, I wanted to know whether Mrs. Podswell and—she hesitates just a second—"you were going?"

"Signa colors and brushes a crumb from the lace on her sleeve.

"I'm sorry I can't give it to you," she says, laughing softly. "I don't know," and she looks across at her aunt.

He is silent for a moment. Then he says, with a smile of humor. "I wonder whether she would be very much shocked if I asked her?"

"She can but make the experiment," says Signa, trying to speak lightly, and hide the subtle pleasure which his anxiety to know whether she is going gives her.

"I think I will," he rejoins, and he actually goes to the sofa with the note in his hand.

"I was just telling Miss Greenville," he says, in his quiet voice, "that Lady Rookwell has been kind enough to send me an invitation, and that she mentions that she has asked the rector, you and Miss Greenville. I hope you think of going, Mrs. Podswell."

"Oh, Podswell would jump at him covertly. There is always something about this man that awes her, and makes her embarrassed and awkward, just as it does the rector."

"I—yes, we have had an invitation, but I haven't spoken to Mr. Podswell yet; my nerves—I don't know."

"Ahem!"—told Lady Rookwell, whom I met this afternoon, that I hoped you would be well enough; and Signa, of course, will accompany us if we go," says the rector. "Are you going, Mr. Warren?"

"Certainly—yes," he answers, as if there had never been any doubt of it. It is very like of her ladyship to remember a stranger."

Then the rector coughs, and rubs his chin, keeping his small eyes fixed on Hector Warren's boots.

"I—er—should decline any invitation other than Lady Rookwell's; for a neighbor of ours, Mr. Brown, of Rideley, is dead, but her ladyship calls it quite a family dinner, quite quiet; and—with an unctuous sigh—"I am sure poor Mr. Brown, if he could express his thoughts, would wish that I should go."

Which is somewhere near the truth, as Mr. Brown and the rector had never been such friends that the Brown should care whether the rector went or stayed away.

"He was the vicar of Rideley," goes on Uncle Podswell, folding his hands meekly. "And—or—I wish Lord Delamore were in England. The ahem!—parish is near my own, almost a part of it; indeed it has often been remarked that it would be well if it should become merged in it. If—ahem!—if I knew Lord Delamore's present address, I think that I should feel it my duty, my positive duty, to put the case to him."

A curious smile glows in Hector Warren's eyes for a moment, then he inclines his head slightly.

"You might write to Delamore's agent, you know," he suggests.

The rector sighs solemnly, as the thought occurs to him that this Hector Warren must be pretty intimate with his lordship to speak of him without his title, as he always does.

"I would rather communicate my ideas to his lordship direct. Have you any idea where he is?"

And he raises his eyes for a moment with an anxious look. He wants the name of Rideley very badly indeed; very badly.

"If I were to tell you Paris, or Cairo, or Rome—by the way, he would not be very likely to be at Rome now, would he?—or Switzerland, your letter might not find him."

"That is very true," assents the rector. "I'm sorry you can't tell me, but

"I'm very much obliged all the same. If his lordship should write to you, perhaps you will give me his address."

"Delamore writes to me, I certainly will," replies Hector Warren, emphatically.

"Thank you, thank you very much," says the rector, effusively.

Then Hector Warren goes back to the table.

"It is all right," he says, not bending down or speaking particularly low, yet managing that his voice shall reach Signa only. "Mr. Podswell and you are going. I shall write an acceptance to-night, and now I suppose I must go," he adds, rather reluctantly. "I feel that I ought not to have intruded."

Signa glances at the heavy black marble clock, and her eyes say, "It is not late yet," but he holds out his hand, and when she puts hers into it, his fingers close over and press it tightly.

"Good-night," he says, in a low voice, "I shall not see you again—Philip! that is, Lady Rookwell!"

"Good-night, Mr. Podswell," he says, as he shakes hands with the rector. "I hope you may get your living, and once again the curious smile curves his lips."

"Ahem!—I am sure I am very much obliged to you!" says the rector, shaking his hand up and down as if it were a pump handle. "Very much obliged to you, indeed."

CHAPTER XII.

"Upon my word, it is very good of you to come," says Lady Rookwell, at the evening of the dinner-party at the Villa, as Lady Rookwell's dainty little house is called, and notwithstanding her declaration that it is to be "quite a quiet, family affair," the drawing-room is pretty well crowded.

One lady is dressed in black satin, with here and there a diamond ornament glittering on the rich soft stuff, but her keen eyes almost outvie the diamonds as she puts them on Hector Warren, with a smile that is half sarcastic, half good-humored. There is a sudden silence in the room as her ladyship's musically clear voice makes the little speech of welcome, and those who have not yet seen this mysterious man-from-nowhere, Mr. Hector Warren, look round at him curiously.

"Very good," repeats her ladyship. "I'm afraid you'll find it rather dull. Dinner-parties always are. I don't know why people should ever come to them, or why they ever give them."

A smile goes round the room at this speech, which would be considered extremely rude and inhospitable if any one but Lady Rookwell had made it; and every ear is strained to catch the reply which Hector Warren will make to this awkward and embarrassing sentiment. But he is not at all embarrassed.

"For the same reason that makes us unfortunate men wear tall hats on special occasions," he says. "But there are exceptions to every rule; some men like tall hats, and I am sure that any one would be happy to be one of your ladyship's dinner-party."

"Hem!" says her ladyship, showing her teeth. "Very prettily said. You'll find some friends here you know," she adds, and turns away to receive some new-comers.

He looks round the room, not brilliantly but comfortably lighted with wax candles, and nods to the captain and Mr. Jenks, and to Dr. Plumble, who he goes up to Sir Frederic, who is leaning against the wall with a mixture of awkward shyness and haughty displeasure that sits comically on his face; goes up to him and holds out his hand.

"How do you do, Sir Frederic?" he says, in his calmest, easiest manner.

Sir Frederic cringes, and for a moment he starts at the impressive face as if he meant to blurt out something savage; but the cool impassiveness of the dark eyes, the easy, assured manner, are too much for him, and he holds out his big hand grudgingly, and muttering a "Good-evening" sullenly, stalks away.

Hector Warren, however, does not look at all embarrassed by his cool reception, which all present have noticed, of course, but turns to Dr. Plumble as calmly and naturally as usual.

While the doctor is holding forth on the chances of the coming spring season, there is a sudden cessation of the hum and chatter in the room, and Hector Warren, looking up, sees that the rector's party has entered.

"Dear me," says the doctor, beneath his voice, and with a little sideways nod of approbation, "what a beautiful girl she is! looks more beautiful than ever to-night."

"Fatigue from Poisoned Blood"

"Stagnant action of the liver, kidneys and bowels, leads to the blood which is poisonous."

"Poisoned blood is the cause of tired, languid, headache, backache and bodily pains and aches."

"By awakening the action of these filtering and excretory organs, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills thoroughly cleanse the system, purify the blood and cure such ailments as indigestion, biliousness, kidney derangement and constipation, etc."

"Are you alluding to Miss Greenville?" asks Hector Warren, with the faintest of smiles.

"Bless my soul, yes," says the little doctor, with a chuckle. "There is no one else to rouse up the enthusiasm of an old man like Mr. Warren. I thought of your pretty first time I saw her, but, gad! she has improved even these last few days; there is more light in her eyes and that delicate color in her face, and a wonderful air, Northwell, wonderful!" and with a nod of satisfaction the doctor blows his nose with the sound of a trumpet, after the fashion of country doctors all the year round.

Perhaps the sound attracts Signa's attention, for she looks that way, and sees not only the doctor, but the staid figure standing beside him, and the faint color, grows suddenly rosier, but for what reason the doctor, much puzzled, cannot divine, as he goes up to pay his respects.

But though there is a general crowd- ing round the beautiful young creature, whose appearance has caused such a sudden sensation of admiration and curiosity, Hector Warren, pale face and walls, Sir Frederic, whose face has gone from pale to red, and from red to pale again, shuffles his big feet for a moment, then, like a moth drawn to the candle, he goes up to her.

Those who happen to be looking at him can see the sudden pallor and hear the constrained tones of his voice, which discover the emotion that he is struggling with, but Signa does not notice his manner. She had thought him shy and awkward, and as calmly and pleasantly as if he were—say Lady Rookwell herself—she gives him her hand and welcomes him with that faint smile in the gray eyes, and about the delicate lips, that render her beauty, for the moment, sheer loveliness.

Hector Warren, standing with his hand resting on a chair back, waits until the greetings are over and dinner is announced, then he approaches her in a manner so quiet and unobtrusive that he is not noticed.

She looks at him, and he bends his head before her and gives him her hand, but with nothing of the smile which turned Sir Frederic's brain: indeed, her face is rather pale, and her eyes seem to droop heavily under the regard of his dark ones, and her breath comes with a faintly-drawn sigh, as he gently grasps her so gently and yet so firmly.

"I thought you were never coming!" he says, in a low voice, but not so low but Lady Rookwell hears him.

"So did I," says her ladyship, "and if you had kept us another quarter of an hour, my dear, I should have hated you for the rest of my life, pretty as you are. I am old enough to dislike having my dinner spoiled because a young girl can't get her hair right, or a flower won't fix itself properly."

Signa laughs softly.

"I don't want you to hate me, Lady Rookwell," she says. "It wasn't my hair, and the only flower I wear is Archie's star in my button-hole. I wear the gate. I hope he has done it nicely!" And she bends her head to display a couple of ox-eyed daisies resting on the dark, silken hair.

The gesture, so natural and unaffected, has so much grace about it that Lady Rookwell's keen eyes soften, and she puts her white arm nearest her with her hand.

"It is of no use trying to frighten you, my dear," she says. "But some day you will find that I am a dreadful old ogre, and that I shall eat you up, pretty as you are."

"I am not afraid," said Signa, laughing.

Then Lady Rookwell looks up at Hector Warren with a curious smile, considers a moment, and just as he is thinking that she is going to tell him to take Signa to dinner, she grins sardonically and beckons to Sir Frederic, who has been standing just within ear-shot with a look of suppressed impatience and anger on his face.

"Sir Frederic, will you take Miss Greenville in?" she says. "Mr. Warren, please take care of Lady Bumbleby."

The faintest, slightest shadow falls on Signa's face, and her eyes half lift themselves to Hector Warren's as Sir Frederic comes forward eagerly, but Hector Warren does not show a sign of the disappointment that she feels, and certainly Lady Rookwell does not her the "Confound her!" which just breathes from her lips.

Lady Bumbleby is fat, fair, and considerably above forty, and she looks rather surprised at having this handsome, distinguished-looking cavalier summoned to her; but she receives him as pleasantly, respectfully and reverentially as if she were the belle of the room.

By chance or intention, Sir Frederic and Signa are placed exactly opposite Hector Warren and Lady Bumbleby. The rector takes one end of the table, Lady Rookwell the other. Imagine a room and a social atmosphere the opposite those of the rectory, and you have Lady Rookwell's dinner party. There is no better hostess than her ladyship in all the county, and before the soup has disappeared everybody with one exception, everybody but Sir Frederic. Never does a man appear to less advantage than when he is in love, and Sir Frederic is very much in love, indeed. To have Signa near him, to feel her soft drapery flutter against his sleeve, to hear her voice, to feel her violet eyes resting on his face, are such exquisite delights that, like most deliriums, it intoxicates him and bewilders his brain. At the best of times he is shy, awkward and bad talker. To-night he feels as if he could find nothing on earth to say, although he would give the world to be eloquent and witty, if only for half an hour.

He does try. He says that it is a fine day at the moment, and then colors at the awkward allusion to her adventure, but Signa does not notice it, and agrees that it is a fine day.

"Do you like hock or champagne with your soup?" he asks.

"Hock, thanks," says Signa, absently, for at the same moment Lady Bumbleby ripples and shakes with laughter at something that Hector Warren has said, and Signa has been straining her ears to catch the something. "No, water, please," she corrects herself hastily, "I beg your pardon."

What was only a general remark, she takes a great deal of salmon lately, explains poor Sir Frederic.

Then Signa tries to concentrate her attention upon him, but Hector Warren's musical voice—not grave now, but bright and bright with a touch of humor—comes across the table, and she cannot shut it out.

"What has come to him to-night? Not only is Lady Bumbleby laughing, but Captain Jenks' 'Ha! ha!' is heard chiming in, and presently Lady Rookwell leans forward and grins approvingly."

"I wonder what Mr. Warren is saying to make them all laugh so?" says Signa, ignorant that Sir Frederic is glancing with suppressed anger across the table.

"I don't know," he says, sullenly. "Some tom-foolery or other. Some men can put on the cap and bells at a moment's notice and wear them easily."

Signa glances at him with genuine surprise.

"Oh, do you think that Mr. Warren is that sort of man?" she says, with faint wonder. "He always seems so grave—and yet then she stops, remembering his face and voice in the cave."

"I don't think about him," says Sir Frederic, trying to speak with easy, contemptuous indifference, in which attempt he fails utterly. "I don't admire the dinner-table wit. I detect your 'funny man.'"

Signa smiles at the idea of calling Hector Warren a "funny man," and Sir Frederic, seeing the smile, reddens angrily and bends over his plate in silence. The rector's dry-like voice can be heard at the other end of the table now and again, and Captain Jenks' subdued growl strikes in occasionally; but the clear, musical voice of Hector Warren is the plainest heard, for the reason that all those near him are eager to catch what he says.

A TALK ON RHEUMATISM

Telling How to Actually Cure This Painful Malady.

This article is for the man or woman who suffers from rheumatism who wants to be cured, not merely relieved—but actually cured. The most the rheumatic sufferer can hope for is a rubbing something on the tender, aching joint, is a little relief. No lotion or liniment ever did or can make a cure. The rheumatic poison is rooted in the blood. Therefore rheumatism can only be cured when this poisonous acid is driven out of the blood.

Any doctor will tell you this is true. If you want something that will go right to the root of the trouble in the blood, take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They make new, rich blood, which drives out the poisonous acid and cures rheumatism to stay cured. The truth of these statements has been proved in thousands of cases throughout Canada, and the following cure is a striking instance.

Mr. F. M. Simpson, R. No. 1, Blenheim, Ont., says: "For a long time I was confined to my bed, and actually crippled with rheumatism. The trouble first began in my ankle, which was much swollen. I thought it might be a sprain, but the doctor said it was not. He advised me to go to bed, and then he said that the trouble would not be aggravated. I did as directed, but instead of getting better, I spread first to my right knee, then to my left knee, and then to my arms. The limbs became much swollen, and if I moved they caused me considerable pain. I seemed to get weak in other respects, and fell off in weight from 165 to 135 pounds. I had no appetite, and I could not sleep. In everything, one day while reading a paper, I came across the case of a rheumatic sufferer cured by using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I decided to try them and sent for three boxes. By the third box I was feeling better, and I was able to get up. Continuing the use of the pills I was first able to go about with the use of a crutch, which, after I discarded for a cane, and then I was able to do without the cane and walk, and go through as briskly as I had ever done. I feel that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been a blessing to me, and I strongly recommend them to other similar sufferers."

You can procure these pills through any dealer in medicine or get them by mail at 60 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams-Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

RIGHT MUST TRIUMPH.
(Rochester Post-Express.)

If justice comes to wreck, said the philosopher Kant, human life will have no worth. This statement bears intrinsic evidence of truth, and the mind accepts it as such. A state of society in which injustice permanently prevailed would be intolerable. It would be no longer life to live therein, and life would have no value.

Surveying the past with such knowledge of it as we have, we find no epoch in which injustice did not exist. We find no time when the selfishness of power and the passions and malevolence of man did not make many lives as miserable as heartless triumphs could make to them. Nor is there an era known in history when subjugated peoples somewhere in the world were not oppressed. We can never be sure, however, how much the discipline of servitude profited a particular people. The Israelites to take the most familiar instance, learned all in much less time than their oppressors learned it. And is it not apparent that the discipline of servitude profited a particular people? The Israelites to take the most familiar instance, learned all in much less time than their oppressors learned it. And is it not apparent that the discipline of servitude profited a particular people?

Slavery had not brought them here? As for individual suffering, there is never in any age a lack of that, and there are as many cases to-day as ever of what seems upon the surface of it to be injustice. Neither innocence of evil-doing nor excellence of intentions can guarantee anybody happiness or freedom from disease or length of days. But we know so little about the evolutionary process and see only so small a segment of life that we are not warranted in condemning the creative plan. We must assume, although we do not understand it fully, that it is just to the last degree.

Surviving the world and contracting our own times with former times is it not manifest that injustice and cruelty on a great scale, to subject peoples, races, states, is steadily lessening? Is it not now the exception to the rule that the weaker peoples are exploited and oppressed? Turkey is barbarous; and no alien race as far as known is reconciled to German rule. But generally speaking, civilized nations treat their dependencies kindly, justly, as we have treated our Philippines, improve their conditions, and with their loyalty as both England and Russia have won the respect and love of peoples or tribes who speak a hundred tongues. Justice is not coming to wreck upon our planet. Human history shows a great and steady gain, an upward trend and has persisted through the ages. There have been crimes during this war. There have been crimes that have shocked the world. There may be other Lusitania incidents or worse; but can anybody believe that the outcome of this war will be such that the killing of non-combatants will be enslavement of populations or the enslavement of nations?

What is the future? Does any intelligent American believe that mankind is to take that backward step into barbarism? The immediate outlook may seem dark. The event may hang in the balance for another year or more. The world is on the verge of a battle, with the continent for a battle-field, in the annals of man. But we believe that the forces which make for progress and righteousness must triumph and that in the future which is coming on "through the fog of delirium" there will be no possibility of such a reverse seen in this war.

ALASKAN FOOD.

The Indian Makes Ice Cream of Tallow and Berries.

The main food of the Alaskan Indian is meat and fish. In the winter many people do not cook the fish at all; they leave them in the house for two or three days, and then eat them raw. Women always serve the food and always say that others are satisfied before beginning their own meal. They have to be very careful not to spill anything, for that would bring bad luck upon the person whom they are serving. When a person is invited to eat in the village it is considered bad manners to eat all that is before him. He must leave enough to take home to the members of the family who did not come.

His guest a piece of dried fish to hold the food which he is to take home. The fish is broad and flat, about one-half an inch thick, and the bundle is carried away openly, without any attempt at hiding the contents. The summer berries, roots and roots are added to the diet, and berries are frozen in the fall to last through the winter. Since white people came, flour and canned goods have changed the food very much. It is easy to have ice cream for dessert, for the summer berries are mixed with snow, sometimes fish is added to it, and when it is frozen it makes a fine dish.—Southern Workman.

A SICKLY WIFE NO FIT MATE FOR ANY MAN

GIRLS AND WOMEN SHOULD LOOK WELL TO THEIR HEALTH AND STRENGTH.

Never before was physical health so eagerly sought for as to-day. No man finds happiness in a sickly wife, and the woman who wishes to enjoy the pleasures of life should spare no effort to maintain perfect health.

Is your daughter growing up strong and ruddy? Has she strength to drink in greedily all the pleasures that youth so zealously seeks—or is she of enjoying the delightful exercise of walking—does she still feel as refreshed and vigorous, or is she exhausted, indifferent, or perhaps irritable?

When strength and vigor can be so easily maintained by Ferrozene, when brought to the cheeks and elasticity to the step, it is plainly a mother's duty to see that Ferrozene is on hand to assist her daughter back to health.

Upon the watch of health, nothing follows a stream of rich, nourishing blood which imparts that power and surplus energy so earnestly desired by those in health.

Stop and think what this means for your daughter—certainly a great deal, and it can be accomplished by Ferrozene.

Every growing girl and young woman derives enormous benefit in many ways from this nutritive, vitalizing tonic.

It is especially suited for young men and is a guarantee of health and regularity as long as it is used. Ferrozene is free from alcohol and perfectly safe to use. Prepared in the form of a chocolate-coated tablet and sold in 50c boxes, or six for $2.50, at all dealers, or direct from The Cattarozzone Co., Kingston, Ont.

Coming of the Alarm Watch.

The alarm watch has come, a product of war's necessities. Military movements must now be timed so exactly with a view to co-ordination that care is taken that the watches of the officers concerned agree to the second. It is necessary that the watch be visible in the dark. The result is a British invention—an alarm watch with a luminous face.

It has also arrived in this country, for it is useful in business, society and travel as in war. A business man who has an appointment need no longer keep his eye on the clock, with his mind constantly diverted from his work; he need only set his watch and go on unperturbed till the alarm rings. The society woman can avoid missing her train by using the same watch. A tete-a-tete, she need just set the alarm of her wrist-watch. A person going on a journey may set it to ring at the tinkle-tinkle in his pocket when he is to start for the station. When a time limit has been set for public speeches, the speaker can set his watch to ring for the long-looked-for bore—Portland Oregonian.

Child Needs.

"Every child should have mud pies, grasshoppers, water bugs, tadpoles, frogs, mud turtles, elderberries, wild strawberries, acorns, chestnuts, trees to climb, brooks to wade in, water lilies, woodchucks, bats, bees, butterflies, various animals to pet, hay fields, pine cones, rocks, roll, sand, snakes, worms, and hornets, and any child who has been deprived of these has been deprived of the best part of his education."

So says Luther Burbank, the horticulturist, in "The Training of the Human Plant," a book in which he discusses the rights of children, their needs and the possibilities of their development, adapting to human conditions his unique knowledge of life and growth in the world of plants.

"By being well acquainted with all these," he continues, "they come into the modern harmony with nature, whose lessons are, of course, natural and wholesome."

Episode of a Halloween Party

By BARBARA PHIPPS

Myrtle wrote me to spend a week with her at their country place in October. It is said that we women put the most important part of a letter in a postscript, and Myrtle certainly did so in this case, for in a space where she had scarcely room to write them were the words, "Jimmie Atherton will be with us."

Myrtle devoted three pieces of her letter in suggesting different costumes from which I might choose one to wear at a fancy dress Halloween party she proposed to give for her guests. She advised me to bring my costume with me, for I could not get one in the country.

I arrived three days before the party and was disappointed to find that Mr. Atherton would not be with us till Halloween. He had telephoned me that he expected to meet me at Myrtle's home party and had given me to understand that all would be settled between us during our visit. Of course no one else than I could make out his meaning, though I can't help but consider his saying anything over a phone to convey such a meaning evidence of the impatience of lovers.

The three days spent waiting for the arrival of my lover, and especially what I expected to hear from him, were the longest of my life. I fear I presented a sad appearance to the other guests moping by myself and, if I joined in their sports, showing plainly that my mind—indeed, my heart—was somewhere else. At any rate, Myrtle knew where my heart was if the others did not.

During the day before the party we were all busy preparing our costumes, some of which must be constructed impromptu. The men were very remiss about this. What women love to do in a matter of dress is a bore to a man, and several of Myrtle's men guests had come either without a fancy dress or with a simple domino and mask. Myrtle insisted on every one representing some historical character.

At 5 o'clock in the afternoon Myrtle received a telegram from Jimmie—my Jimmie—that he could not get away in time for the Halloween party, but he would do the best he could. When Myrtle told me this my heart sank within me like lead. I dreaded joining in the evening's festivities with such a disappointment upon me. But what could I do? I must make the best of it and not render myself obnoxious by pining among a group of merry-makers.

I succeeded so poorly that Myrtle felt obliged to come to my rescue. About 10 o'clock, when the merrymaking was at its height, she said to me: "Gwen, go out into the grounds with a hand mirror and see if the man you are to marry does not look over your shoulder."

I was glad of an excuse to get away by myself. I didn't care for a hand glass, but Myrtle had provided a number of them for the occasion and thrust one into my hand. Several of the girls had already gone forth on an errand similar to mine, each having taken a mirror.

I stroled out, not into the darkness, for the moon was near the full, taking my way down the driveway that led from the house to the gate. Presently I stopped and raised the glass. I did this without being conscious of the act, for I knew already the man I would marry and had no idea of seeing his face in the glass. I moved the mirror to take in different places behind me and at last saw something I was not prepared for.

One of our house party—as was evident from her costume—was sitting on a bench in a recess among shrubbery, and beside her sat a man in ordinary business apparel. As I looked he suddenly drew her toward him and gave her a bear hug. During this episode a cloud was passing over the moon, but as soon as it had rolled away there was light enough for me to see that the man in the case was my Jimmie Atherton.

I moved noiselessly away and went to the house and on reaching it back to my room, where I spent half an hour getting myself in a condition to go downstairs. When I descended I found Mr. Atherton, who had not long before come in, having arrived by a late train. He came up to me smiling, but I bowed to him ceremoniously and passed on.

I nerved myself to show great gaiety for the rest of the evening, especially before Mr. Atherton, and was glad when the festivities were over and I could hide my anguish in my room. When all was quiet Myrtle, who had observed that something was wrong with me, came in and asked what it was. When I told her a smile came to her lips, and she asked me what costume the girl Jimmie had hugged wore. I replied that I could not see it distinctly, but it was crimson. At this she burst into a laugh and said:

"That girl was Johnny Webster. He makes up admirably as a woman. He had gone out to spy on the girls who were consulting their mirrors, hoping to look over some girl's shoulder, and while doing so Jimmie Atherton came up from the station. Johnny hailed him, and the two sat down on a bench for a few moments' chat before coming to the house."

The next morning I was as good as pie to Jimmie. He tried hard to find out why I had treated him so coolly the evening before, but I kept the secret. When we left Myrtle's home we were engaged.

Camping Courtesy.

Good camping grounds should be the object of the sportsman and lover of the woods, and it is a pity that they should so often be deserted by the unappreciative. This is the season when the forest floor will be strewn with tin cans and cracker boxes, when the clean woods will be marred with all sorts of ugly rubbish, and when the pleasure of late campers will be half destroyed by the vandalism of their predecessors. Great tracts of forest will be blackened by flames set from little campfires. The growth of young timber will be checked. And all the trouble could be banished if only people would observe the few simple rules of the woods. The forest is the last refuge of solitude and beauty; therefore do not make its secluded glades into vulgar picnic grounds. Noblesse oblige there as elsewhere, and though the after comers may not know you he will know what sort of person you are by the condition of the camping grounds you leave. Countryside Magazine.

The Gold Dust Was There.

North America has counted as a gold producing continent only since the late forties. But it might well have done so for about 200 years. According to the London Chronicle, in the voyage round the world which began in 1719 the privateer Captain Shelvocke found in certain California valleys "a rich black mold which, as you turn it fresh up to the sun, appears as if intermingled with gold dust. Though we were a little prejudiced," he adds, "against the thought that it could be possible that this metal should be so promiscuously and universally mingled with common earth, yet we endeavored to cleanse and wash the earth from some of it, and the more we did the more it appeared like gold. In order to be further satisfied I brought away some of it, which we lost in our confusion in China."

The Number Nine.

There were nine earths, according to medieval cosmogony, nine heavens, nine rivers of hell and nine orders of angels. The number being perfection since it represented divinity was often used to signify a great quantity, as in the phrases, "A nine days' wonder," "A cat has nine lives" and "Nine tailors make a man." In Scotland a dithered cow was cured by washing her in nine surfs. To see nine apples was considered extremely lucky. Nine knots made in a black woolen thread served as a charm in the case of a sprain. It was also believed and is still by some that if a servant girl finds nine green peas in one pod and lays them on the window sill the first man that enters will be her beau. Nine grains of wheat laid on a four leaved clover enable one, it is said, to see the fairies.

Foiling a Fakir.

A story used to be told at Cairo of Sir Richard Owen during one of his sojourns in Egypt. The great naturalist was seated in the shade on the veranda at Sheppard's hotel when the inevitable snake charmer came to him and produced from his bag a lively specimen of the horned asp—the deadly cerastes. The professor gazed and, nothing daunted, stooped and plucked the horns from the head of the reptile wriggling at his feet, remarking to a bystander that the man would probably think twice before trying to palm off upon any one else a harmless snake as a cerastes by the aid of a couple of fish bones. With anybody else the charmer would probably have succeeded. He had tried it on the wrong man.

Attar of Roses.

Attar of roses, by common consent, ranks at the head of the list of perfumes. Other preparations from roses, too, hold a high place and have long been esteemed. Rosewater is historic. When Saladin entered Jerusalem in the twelfth century he had the walls of the mosque of Omar washed with it. But attar of oil of roses is by far the most precious and the most prized of all. An eastern prince will present to an honored guest rub rubies, rubies and diamonds and then add, as the rarest of all, a crystal bottle filled with this essence.

Not Necessarily.

"One wife too many?" exclaimed Mrs. Wederly as she glanced at the headlines of her husband's paper. "I suppose that is an account of the doings of some blameworthy?"

"Not necessarily, my dear," replied her husband without daring to look up.—Buffalo Courier.

Of Course She Doesn't.

"George is such a nice chap," said the girl in pink. "I always enjoy having him call on me."

"I don't," snapped the other.

"Of course you don't, dear. You'd rather have him call on you."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Love.

The greatest happiness to be known in life is the conviction that we are loved; that we are loved for ourselves or, rather, loved in spite of ourselves.—Hugo.

Too Close.

"Why are you asking me for help? Haven't you any close relatives?"

"Yes. That's the reason why I'm appealing to you."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Some Solace.

"How are the new twins?"

"It might be worse. They usually cry in unison. You know they might work in relays."—Kansas City Journal.

Chiefly the mold or a man's fortune is to his own hands.—Bacon.

Queer Use For Cordite.

Some years ago Lord Haldane started the use of cordite in a manner which he thought was a remark made by another member as to the danger attached to the use of cordite by saying that he himself possessed a walking stick made of cordite which he sometimes brought down to the house and left in the cloakroom. An uneasy look stole over the faces of the members present, but in a scientific and highly technical speech his lordship explained that cordite was a perfectly innocent substance until brought into contact with dangerous allies, and without certain ingredients necessary to convert it into an explosive it might be handled with impunity. At the same time it was noticed that Lord Haldane's stick was given a wide berth when it was seen in the cloakroom.

Japanese Translations.

A writer in a Tokyo journal reports the struggles of Japanese writers to translate English idioms into their own tongue. We cite several of these howlers. "We put our heads together" (We collided). "He could not find it for the life of him" (He could not discover it till his death). "He is a great loss to his country" (He is a great calamity to his country). "He hung his head for shame" (He committed suicide by strangulation). "He takes things easily" (He is a soft thief). "She sat over a cup of tea" (She sat upon a teacup). "I shudder at the bare idea" (I shudder to think that the man is naked). "The bare idea" is evidently translated into "the idea of bareness." "Spare me five minutes" (Spare my life—only for five minutes).

Horses in the Time of Homer.

The horses used in Homer's time were war horses. The warriors were drawn in chariots. The art of riding was known, but it is alluded to as something unusual. Ulysses at the time of his shipwreck "bestrode a plank, like a horseman on a big steed." There are reasons for believing that the practice of riding was much later than that of driving, and the myth of the centaur, where, according to Shakespeare, "man is incorporated and dematerialized with the beast," probably originated at an early period when the appearance of a man on horseback was a novel sight.

Too Costly.

At one of the Boston theaters recently there was shown on the screen a picture of a stock exchange. The brokers were hurrying about, pushing, waving their arms, gesticulating and to the uninitiated acting like a lot of insane men. Two young ladies in the balcony watched them with breathless interest for some time, then one asked: "Why in the world don't they sit down and rest once in a while?"

"My dear," was the enlightening answer, "don't you know that a seat in the Stock Exchange costs thousands of dollars?"—Harper's Magazine.

Two Kinds of Joy.

The joys as well as the burdens of life are pretty evenly divided between the sexes after all, and probably a little girl derives as much innocent pleasure from being a flower girl at a wedding as a little boy does from going to school with a live garter snake in his trousers pocket.—Ohio State Journal.

He Told Her.

"What is it, do you suppose, that keeps the moon in place and prevents it from falling?" asked Araminta.

"I think it must be the beams," replied Charlie softly.

Keeps Him Busy.

The Skeptical Aunt—What does he do, Dolly, for a living? Dolly greatly surprised—Why, auntie, he does not have time to earn a living while we are engaged!

Copy of letter Received by Mrs. Bissonnette on the 1st inst.

France, 10, 12, 16.
Mrs. ANNIE BISSENETTE, Stirling, Ont.
Dear Madam:—No doubt by this time you have been officially informed of your son's death from wounds received in action. I sympathize with you most sincerely, for I know how deeply you will feel the loss of such a son. He must have been a good son, for no boy could have carried on his duties with such bravery and devotion and not be made of the right kind of stuff. As Medical officer of an infantry Battalion, I shall miss him sadly, and the men of his platoon, whom he served so faithfully will also miss him. I selected him as stretcher-bearer shortly after he joined the unit, and I never regretted it. What impressed me most was his uncomplaining faithfulness to duty. He hadn't a rugged physique, yet he endured the hardest kind of physical and mental strain during our long tour on the Somme front with never a murmur. He was never sick, but always fit and willing to carry on. He enjoyed his work, and altogether exhibited the true spirit of the trained soldier.

He received his mortal wound in the longest and greatest battle the world has ever known—The Somme. It was on the 18th of Nov., our battalion went over the parapet, and made straight for the German trenches, and he accompanied them in the capacity of dresser only. He was a stretcher-bearer so called, but only acted as dresser, applying first aid to the wounded man. Those dressers had a very dangerous and difficult task to perform. No fighting has produced altogether new conditions so that the work of S.B. or Dresser is most hazardous during an engagement. Your boy knew these things, and yet never flinched. When he received his mortal wound he and another S. B. were hunting for a safe place to put the wounded. Both stopped to render assistance. Roy was binding up the wounds of a German when a shell burst on the parapet of the trench, burying both him and his enemy patient. A piece of the shell entered the side of his neck. It was this which caused his death for he was soon dug out, in fact, his head was not covered at all. I understand the same shell killed his patient. He was soon evacuated, and reached the main dressing station of the Field Ambulance. He was considered a serious case and kept for some hours. He seemed to rally and he was sent further back. I can give you no further details, for when he reached the Field Ambulance I lost track of him entirely.

I thought you would be desirous to know these circumstances and regretfully send them to you.
Sincerely yours,
A. C. C. JOHNSON

Subscription to the Leader

$1.50 on and after Feb. 1st.

In common with publishers all over Canada, we have decided to increase the subscription rate of The Leader to $1.50 per year, commencing on the 1st of February.

With newsprint, ink and type metal doubled in price, commercial papers in some lines trebled in price, with rollers and all other materials enormously increased, the $1.50 is not a matter of choice, but of vital necessity to the life of The Leader.

We believe our readers will see the justice of our action and will not refuse to give the increased price. Local publishers have labored for years under the disadvantage of too low a subscription rate compared with the value of the services rendered. Now, when all classes of the community are receiving higher prices for their commodities, it is only reasonable that the local publisher should share in the increase.

The new rate will go into effect on February 1st, and in the meantime subscriptions will be taken at the old rate of $1.00.

ENTERED INTO REST

At the family residence, Rawdon Tp. on Monday, January 8th, Lorne Burton beloved and only son of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Tucker, in the 16th year of his age.

He contracted scarlet fever about a week ago and passed away on Monday night. The funeral which was private took place on Wednesday at 2.30 p. m. in the Bethel cemetery.

Presentation and Address

On Monday evening of this week a pleasant surprise was sprung on Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Shortt, who have for years been living a few miles west of Spring Brook and who are now moving to an other part of the county.

A large number of their friends gathered to bid them good-bye and to give them something more substantial than mere words to carry away with them to their new home as a remembrance of their stay here. The house was well filled and the large number of friends from long distances testified to the popularity of Mr. and Mrs. Shortt.

After the friends had well gathered the following address was read, and a well filled purse was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Shortt:—

Jan. 15th, '17

To Mr. and Mrs. G. W. SHORTT AND FAMILY.

We, your friends and neighbors have learned with sincere regret that you are about to leave us to take up your abode in another part of the county.

We have gathered here this evening for the purpose of saying good-bye and to try to express in some tangible way the esteem in which you are held. During all the years of your stay amongst us we have found you to be ever true and faithful neighbors in every sense of the word. We believe you have done your best in doing your duty as you saw it, and by serving your Creator by working for the betterment of your fellow men.

We believe you, Mr. Shortt, to be a man of moral courage: one not afraid to stand by his convictions.

We of your friends who are also members of the I.O.O.F., have perhaps had more opportunity to learn that you are a man of high aspirations and noble ambitions. Not alone that you aspired to, and were elected to, the highest office of this Association in the District, that of District Deputy Grand Master, which office you now so ably fill. Not alone because of the amount of good you have been able to accomplish in connection with this great Fraternal Society, but also by your daily walk of life.

There are two classes of people in this world, leaneers and lifters. You, Mr. Shortt and you also, Mrs. Shortt have been lifters. What more can we say?

As a token of our esteem we ask you to accept this purse and may it serve to remind you of the many friendships that will never be broken, no matter how far you may roam from old Rawdon.

We wish you all kinds of success and may God prosper you in all your ventures and your little family in your new home.

Signed on behalf of your many friends,
FRANK BATEMAN, JAMES GIBSON,
Geo. E. THOMPSON.

Mr. Shortt thanked the company in a few well chosen words and expressed the hope that they would see a good number of their Rawdon friends when they had settled in their new home.

After the ladies had served coffee and a generous lunch, the guests took their departure. All spent a most enjoyable evening, marred only by the fact that we were saying good-bye to two of our most respected citizens.

Should Have Been $1.50

The Brighton Ensign like the rest of the newspapers who have been forced to raise their prices owing to the increase in cost of paper, received the following letter which we publish in full. The only comment we make is how well the Ensign comment at the $1.25.

A Sweet One?

Dear Sir:—In my capacity of getting rich quick schemes, I am sure you will oblige me by discontinuing your paper which is just out.

Yours truly,

(Thanks, very much. If we only had a few more of your stamp in Canada, what a prosperous country it would be, and what a pleasant life we'd have. I'm very pleased to inform you that in the present you are the only man who has taken such a view of our request for a humble existence in these trying times of raising prices, a matter over which we have absolutely no control. I am positive that from the present outlook in respect to the cost of materials and everything required to produce a weekly paper, that we will not come out as well at the end of 1917 as at the old rate of $1.00 in advance. The mistake that we are making is in not doing as the majority of publishers of weekly papers who have made the price $1.50.

Get-rich-quick! Why didn't you say get-rich-quick and often for not getting what you should ($1.50). Don't think we care a cent about losing you as a subscriber, because down in our heart we positively do not—We know you. The only request we have is for you to mind your own business and not drag your sleeve through our beans, (although we can't afford to have beans at the present price), but don't misunderstand the expression. In plain words we don't care a rap for all such as you as ever lived, and if the truth were known your presence in Germany would be more

WILLIAM DONNON

Mr. William Donnnon, one of the best known farmers of the Township of Huntingdon passed away on Saturday night last after a few day's illness from blood-poison. The disease originated in a slight abrasion of one of his hands.

Deceased was born near West Huntingdon about fifty years ago and was the eldest son of the late Joseph Donnnon. He is survived by his wife, and two sons who reside at home and one daughter, Mrs. Chambers of Crookston. He is also survived by his aged mother, two brothers, Thomas of Rawdon and James of the United States and one sister, Mrs. Thomas Montgomery of Rawdon.

Deceased spent his boyhood years in Stirling where he learned the trade of harness-making. About fifteen years ago he removed to Moira where he continued to practice his trade and also to work a small farm. Disposing of his property at Moira about three years ago he purchased the James Hawkins farm at West Huntingdon, one of the best in the township. Here by his thrift and industry he was achieving a fine success.

To Mrs. Donnnon, his untimely demise will come as a great affliction for she is herself in very frail condition of health. The two sons are at present also confined to their home by scarlet fever.

Mr. Donnnon was a faithful member of the Methodist church and though a man of independent views was practically minded towards Conservatism.

To the friends who have suffered this great and premature bereavement this deepest sympathy will be extended.

Will close now wishing you all good success.

The Poor Woman's Lawyer

During and after the American Civil War a horde of pension lawyers arose, who filled the halls of Congress with clamorings for larger and larger pensions to their clients.

In Canada, so far, there has been no such development. The Canadian Patriotic Fund has acted for the woman bereft of her soldier husband, and has set in operation all machinery necessary to secure her the proper pension. It has constituted itself a grateful nation is proud to give her. It has constituted itself the poor woman's lawyer, her pension agent, her guide and friend, and all

Letter from Cpl. W. Ingram

Bramshott Camp, Eng., Dec. 15, '16

Dear friend:—Just a few lines to let you know, that I'm the lucky boy to have the pleasure of getting a pair of socks knit by you, and say, had I known you, I would have bet that you measured my foot as they are a very good fit.

You don't realize how we boys feel when we get a parcel from dear old Canada. This is a very funny country over here, when the people see a Canadian coming to buy anything, up goes the price; other ways this is not a bad place, in a few places, but the best place is our camp. We are treated pretty fair, and the camps are in good shape; there are a great number of us over in this camp. We can't realize this is Xmas time for we have nothing but rain and fog, no such things as snow and ice for skating over here. Well how are all the Stirling people coming on, have you got any soldiers knocking around yet, as boys have wished a good many times that we were back in the old Town Hall again, we had one good time there and didn't know it, but we do now. But we are still the same happy bunch of boys. Well I guess I shall have to close for now. Wishing you and all the Stirling people, especially the ladies a very good and Merry Xmas, followed by a happy and prosperous New Year. Goodnight, Sincerely,

Thanking you once again for your socks.

St. Andrews Sabbath School Entertainment

St. Andrews Sabbath School entertainment held in the Opera House on Friday evening was excellent. Opening chorus by the school.

The Drama "Fifteen miles to Happy Town" was well played. Mr. George Luery as Mr. Green, the owner of the automobile (home made) which was to take a party of ladies to a Convention in Happy Town, was the right man in the right place, his funny sayings kept the audience in fits of laughter. They all played their parts well, but special mention is due Mesdames Reid, Parker and McGee.

Mr. A. D. McIntosh in his scotch songs was encored again and again.

Miss Helen Morrison gave a recitation which was well received, and the boys band, with A. McGee as leader brought down the house. Freda Matthews and Harry Cosby in a character duet were heartily applauded also the humorous character song "Waiting at the Church" was well rendered.

The drill by 16 young ladies was one of the best ever given here. Mrs. Mathew was the accompanist. The entertainment closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

LOYD GEORGE OPTIMISTS ON VICTORY LOAN

Says Allies Look On Britain as the Strong Tower of Entente.

THE CHANCELLOR

Some Additional Information on the Loan He Put Forth.

London Cable.—Premier Lloyd George, speaking in the House of Commons before a great crowd on the occasion of the launching of the "Victory Loan," said: "The Entente has been rejected by the peace offer. The allies have rejected his peace offer. The Emperor did so, he said, to drag those whom he could no longer control. We have rejected his peace terms." "We were not offered terms, but a trap baited with fine words. It would suit Germany to have peace now on her own terms. We all want peace, but it must be a real peace, as follows:—

"My Lord Mayor, my Lords, Ladies and Gentlemen: The Chancellor of the Exchequer in his extremely lucid and impressive speech has placed before you the business side of this proposal, and I think you will agree with me, and I think you will agree with me, after hearing his explanation of his scheme, that he has offered for subscription a loan which possesses all the essential ingredients of an attractive investment. They are the most generous terms that the Government can offer without incurring the tax-payer. I agree that the Chancellor is right in offering such liberal terms, because it is important that we should secure a big loan now not merely in order to enable us to finance the war effectively, but as a demonstration of the continued resolve of this country to fight the war to the end. It is upon that aspect of the question that I should like to say a few words.

"The German Kaiser a few days ago sent a message to his people that the allies had rejected his peace offers. He did so in order to drag those whom he could no longer drag. (Laughter and cheers.) Where are those offers? We have asked for them, we have never seen them. We were not offered terms; we were offered a trap baited with fine words. They tempted us once, but the lion has his eyes open. (Loud cheers.) We have rejected no terms that we have ever seen. Of course, it would suit them to have peace at the present moment on their terms. We all want peace, but when we get it it must be a real peace. (Cheers.)

"The allied powers, separately and in concert together, have come to the same conclusion. (Cheers.) Knowing what war means, knowing especially that this war means suffering, in human, in human, in human, still decided that even war is better than peace at the Prussian price of domination over Europe. We made it clear in our reply to Germany; we made it still clearer in our reply to the United States.

"Before we attempt to rebuild the temple of peace we must see now that the foundations are solid. They were built upon the shifting sands of Prussian faith; henceforth, it must be on the rock of vindicated justice. (Applause.)

NO DOUBTS ABOUT RESULTS.

"I have just returned from a council of war of the four great allied countries upon whose shoulders most of the terrible war falls. I cannot give you its conclusions—laughter—but it might be information to the enemy. (Renewed laughter.) There were no delusions as to the magnitude of our task; neither were there any doubts about the result.

"I think I can say what was the feeling of every man there. It was one of the most businesslike conferences I ever attended. We faced the whole situation, probed it thoroughly, and looked its difficulties in the face, and made arrangements to deal with them. (Laughter and applause.) We are aware of feeling were confident that we were. (Renewed applause.) All felt that it was a victory were difficult, defeat was impossible. (Applause.) There was no flinching, no wavering, no faint-heartedness, no infirmity of purpose.

"There was a grim resolution at all costs that we must achieve the high aim with which we accepted the challenge of the Prussian military caste and old Europe and the world forever of her menace. (Renewed applause.) No country could have refused the challenge without the loss of honor. None could have rejected it without impairing national security. No one would have failed to take the necessary steps to ensure that the victory was something which is of greater value to every free and self-respecting people than life itself. Those nations did not embark on this enterprise without knowing what it really meant. They were not enticed by the prospects of easy victory. They made this country. The millions of our men who enlisted in the army enlisted after the German victories of August, 1914, when they knew the accumulated and concentrated power of the German military machine. That was when they placed their lives at the disposal of the country. (Cheers.) What about the other lands? They knew what they were encountering; that they were fighting an organization which had been perfected for generations by the best brains of Prussia—perfected for one purpose, the subjugation of Europe. (Applause.)

WHY THEY FIGHT.

"Why did they do it? I planned through hundreds of miles of the beautiful land of France and Italy, and as I did so I asked myself this question: Why did the peasants leave by myriads these sunny vineyards and orchards in France? Why did they quit these enchanting valleys, with their comfort, their security, their charm, in order to face the grim and wild horrors of the battlefields? They did for one purpose, and one purpose only. They were not driven to the slaughter of kings. These are great democratic countries. No Government would have lasted twenty-four hours that had forced them into an abhorrent war against their own free will. They embarked upon it because they knew the fundamental issue had been raised which no country could shirk without imperilling all that has been won in the centuries of the past and all that remains to be won in the ages of the future.

"This is why, as the war proceeds and the German purpose becomes more manifest, the conviction is becoming deeper in the minds of those people that they must work their way through to victory in order to save Europe from an insupportable despotism. (Cheers.) That was the spirit that animated the allied conference in Europe last week. (Renewed cheers.)

BRITAIN THE GREAT TOWER.

"But I tell you one thing that struck me, and strikes me more and more each time that I attend these conferences, and visit the continent: the increasing extent to which the allied peoples are looking to Great Britain. (Loud cheers.) They are trusting her rugged strength and great resources more and more. (Renewed cheers.) She is the tower that will stand in the deep. She is becoming more and more the hope of the oppressed and the despair of the oppressor; and I feel more and more confident that we shall not fail the people who put their trust in us.

"But when that arrogant Prussian came to the signature of the British in the treaty in the waste-paper basket as if it were of no account, they knew not the pride of the land they were treating with such insolent disdain. They know it now. (Cheers.) Our soldiers and our sailors have taught them to respect it. You had an eloquent report from my colleague, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, of the achievements of our soldiers; our sailors—(loud cheers)—are gallantly defending the honor of our country on the high seas. They have strangled the enemy's commerce; they will continue to do so in spite of all the piratical devices of the foe.

"In 1914 and 1915, for two years, a small, ill-equipped army held up a great, well-equipped army. With the best equipment in Europe; in 1916 hurling them back, and delivering a blow from which they are reeling. In 1917 the armies of Britain will be more formidable than ever in training, in efficiency, in equipment; and you may depend upon it, if you give them the necessary support, like will defeat roil to victory through the dangers and perils of the next few months. (Loud cheers.)

BASIS OF NEW LOAN.

Mr. Bonar Law outlined the terms of the new war loan approximately as had been forecast. The bulk of the issue will be five per cent. bonds sold at 95, thus yielding approximately 5 1/2 per cent.

"We are giving the option to those who prefer security to anything else," said Mr. Bonar Law, "of having a tax-compounded loan. That loan will be at the rate of four per cent. It will be issued at par and redeemable at the option of the State at the end of twelve years, but enduring for twenty-five years.

"Well, gentlemen, every one knows that from the viewpoint of financial security it is not a good thing for the Chancellor of the Exchequer to give away the right of taxation in the future. But I do think that if there is anyone wanting to be quite sure that during the period of the loan he will not have to pay a higher income tax than five shillings, we ought to give him that option if he desired.

The prospectus of the new war loan, which was issued to-day, adds a little information to that given in the speech to-day of Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer. It says that on the four per cent. loan "the dividends will be exempt from liability to assessment and the British Income Tax, other than the sur-tax," and specifically announces that the new loan does not carry the right of conversion into any future issue which the Government may make.

The five per cent. will be issued in a period of six years, with the option of redemption after twelve years. The four will run for twenty-five years, with the same option.

Five per cent. of the subscription must be paid with the application, and the remainder will be payable in equal installments before May 30. The proceeds of the loan may be converted into the new loan at par. A similar provision is made for conversion of various types of short-term paper issued in the last few months. Foreign holders of the new loan will not be liable to the British income tax.

The sinking fund provision outlined by Mr. Bonar Law, of having the most striking innovation in connection with the new loan. This is the first time that a British loan has been issued with a sinking fund provision. The Government agrees to set aside monthly a total amount of one per cent. of the total amount of the loan, the sum, representing an annual sinking fund, of proportion of 1 1/2 per cent., will be allowed to accumulate until a fund of £10,000,000 is in hand, which will then be used for purchasing bonds in the open market whenever they fall below the issue price.

NO HIGHER INTEREST RATE.

The bonds will be issued in denominations of £50 and multiples thereof as low as £5 will be received. Mr. Bonar Law's point in his speech aimed his words at investors who might be tempted to withhold their money for possible later issues at a higher rate of interest.

"As far as the Government's intention of the future is concerned," he said, "a higher rate of interest will not be paid at any time. As long as we are not allowed lack of it to hamper the conduct of the war, there is no limit to the rate of interest the Government will pay for money. If this loan should fail—but it will not—there are other methods which can be applied, and the rate of interest in such case will not be five and one-quarter per cent.

"Small it ever be said of this country that it is willing to give its money, but not its money? One supreme effort now and the goal will be reached. The military position does not represent the true position of the war, for the great German military machine is resting on an internal foundation which is crumbling irresistibly before our eyes.

GREEKS HEDGE ON SUBMISSION

Reply to Allies' Ultimatum Not Satisfactory.

Complies on the Entente Main Demands.

Athens Cable.—The acceptance by the Greek Government of the ultimatum of the Entente Powers makes certain reservations. According to the Greek reply control by the Entente allies will be re-established for the security of the Entente allied armies. She will participate in the administration of the country of interfering with local communications. Adherents of ex-Premier Venizelos who have been imprisoned will be released in a manner to be mutually agreed upon between Greece and the Entente nations. The indemnities demanded for property destroyed will be regulated according to the laws of the country.

Moral satisfaction for the events of December 1 and the latest demands for the transfer of Greek troops were unreservedly accepted.

WILL NOT BE TOLERATED.

London Special Cable says—Under the heading "Evasive Greek Reply," the Times says:

"The reply of Constantine's Government to the allied ultimatum is not entirely satisfactory, on many points it complies or suggests compliance with the allied demands, but on some apparently minor issues it equivocates. The allied ultimatum, it is understood required unconditional acceptance of the demands. How far the Greek royalist reply approximates unconditional acceptance can only be determined when the full text of the ultimatum and reply is known. The decision of this question may perhaps let the commander of the allied forces, General Sarail, who now is understood to be in complete control enjoy great freedom of action. He is scarcely likely to tolerate equivocation or evasive tactics on the part of Constantine or royalists.

EXPERTS GIVE GOOD ADVICE ON FARMING

At Annual Meeting of the Ontario Experimental Union.

THE NEW OFFICERS

Warning Against the Decrease in Province's Live Stock.

Guelph Report.—"Co-operative Experiments in Apiculture," was the subject of an interesting address by Morley Pettit, provincial apiarist, at the afternoon session of the Ontario Experimental Union. He pointed out beekeepers are annually confronted with problems peculiar to that particular year. For these reasons the experiments to be of real value must be extended over a series of years, so as to gain cumulative evidence. The season of 1916 was particularly favorable for the production of honey, because of a combination of circumstances, particularly the frequent rains during the early part of the season. The clover plant bears honey in the second year of its life, a superabundance of moisture during the growing period of the first year, a favorable winter, much of the moisture the second year right up to the blooming period, then heat and fine weather while honey is yielding; these are the conditions of clover honey production and were experienced in Ontario leading up to the large crop of 1913 and again 1916.

Reports of experiments made during the year were presented, which were summarized by stating that the season and shortage of farm help had more to do with the failure of many to report. The reports, however, were encouraging and the effect on the production of honey, of work, which has now been carried on for some years is very marked.

"The Home Vegetable Garden" was the subject of an exceedingly instructive address by M. A. H. McKeeney, of the Horticultural Department of the O. A. C.

COST OF TILLING.

Prof. James Murray, of Macdonald College, Quebec, spoke at the Wednesday afternoon session on "Cultivation of the Soil." He gave a most interesting resume of the various implements that had been used from the earliest days of which there is any record up to the time of the steam tractor. He pointed out the different kinds of plows and cultivators and their relative value in preparing soil. Prof. Murray gave some interesting figures in regard to the cost of the operations, based on experiments and observations covering a prolonged period. Discing one acre with small disc (three cuts necessary), 90 cents; discing one acre with large disc (two cuts necessary), 45 cents; discing one acre with catenary disc (one cut necessary), 45 cents; cultivating, 62 cents; plowing with single cultivator, 62 cents; plowing one acre with single plow, 22 cents; plowing one acre with two-plow gang plow, $1.25; cost of seed—seedling one acre, two-horse seeder, cost 22 cents; seedling one acre, three-horse seeder, cost 18 cents. Prof. Murray was not very committal on regard to the use of the steam tractor for the small fields much to do with making that form of cultivation unprofitable. He gave many figures gathered from observation in Western Canada, which showed that the cost per acre for steam tractor was $2.17, and for a gasoline outfit amounted to $2.37. He mentioned several places in the East where farmers had been asked to get a tractor outfit, scarcity of labor forcing them to do this.

In the evening, before a crowded audience, H. G. Bell, of Chicago, agitated the soil improvement committee, gave an interesting illustrated lecture in which he pointed out the importance of soil in the manufacture and use of fertilizers.

MORNING SESSION.

In an address this morning Prof. Geo. E. Day, in speaking on "Production in Ontario of Animal Foodstuffs," referred to the alarming decrease in the number of farms and the loss of soil in the manufacture and use of fertilizers.

The decrease in livestock, he pointed out, was a full and excellent hint to the farmers, has been going on for a number of years, but this year promises a larger decrease than its predecessors. Prof. Day thought a careful consideration of the questions submitted should convince them that they will be suffering in their own interests if they, at this critical time, hold on to as many of their animals as they possibly can, striving to the best of their ability to maintain their herds and flocks at their normal level. There is no occasion for panic, and the Canadian farmer has every reason to regard the future with confidence if his farm is carrying its normal complement of livestock.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The first business of the morning meeting was the election of officers, which resulted as follows: Vice-President, H. B. Webster, St. Mary's, Ont.; Secretary, Dr. C. A. Zavitz, O. A. C.; Treasurer, Dr. C. A. Zavitz, O. A. C.; Squire, Dr. C. A. Zavitz, O. A. C.; Directors: Dr. G. C. Creelman, O. A. C.; Hon. Nelson Monteth, Stratford; P. S. McLaren, Perth; A. H. McKenney, Amherstburg; Norman James, representing the O. A. C. body. Auditors: S. O. Gaudier and R. B. Graham, O. A. C.

The reports of the treasurer and auditors were presented, showing that the receipts during the year were: Government grant, $2,750; balance from 1915, $1,515.67; membership fees, $112; interest, $66.78. There was a total expenditure of $2,538, leaving a balance of $1,828.67.

Dr. Zavitz presented a lengthy statement of the result of co-operative experiments with various kinds of fertilizers on potatoes, mangolds and rape. One of the most interesting addresses of the morning was that of Henry B. Bell, B. S. of Chicago, a former graduate of the O. A. C. He dealt with the management of soil fertility and he used a small laboratory and many charts in his explanation of the many methods employed in order to make the soil suitable for the growing of grains and other farm products. His address was one which was listenable to very carefully, and the audience had to thoroughly understand the various charts presented in order to fully appreciate it. Mr. Bell is considered an expert on this class of work and his explanations were intricate and interesting. He answered a few questions in a very satisfactory manner.

HEAVY SMASH BY BRITISH

Took German Trench On Three-Quarter Mile Front

To Northeast of Beaumont-Hamel.

London Cable.—The British official communication issued to-night says: "A number of minor enterprises were undertaken last night with excellent results. South of the Ancre we entered the trench of the Ancre in the neighborhood of Grandcourt, and took prisoners. Early this morning, a local operation on a large scale northeast of Beaumont-Hamel was completely successful. Our troops carried an enemy trench on a front of three-quarters of a mile and established our position. An enemy counter-attack this afternoon was caught in the open by our artillery, and broken up with loss. One hundred and seventy-six prisoners, including four officers, were taken in the course of the operation. In this area, enemy trenches also were raided last night east of Armentieres and northeast of Ypres. Many casualties were inflicted on the enemy.

"The Berlin report says: 'North of Ypres a heavy attack was repulsed, the enemy's losses were heavy. The English, who had entered a narrow place, were driven back by a counter-thrust. South of Ypres, advance of stronger hostile patrols, but was without success. Near Beaumont, the enemy succeeded in capturing a salient trench section of our position. Our aeroplanes shot down two English captive balloons, which fell down burning.'

HUNS THROW WAR'S BLAME ON ENTENTE

Note to Neutrals Claims Their Peace Offer Was Sincere.

CHARGE VIOLATION

Of Laws of War, in Justification of Course in Belgium.

Berlin Cable.—Germany to-day banned neutral governments a note concerning the reply of the Entente to the German peace proposals. The German Agency announces, it is the first state to make the new agency announcement, that the German Government has received the reply of the Entente to the note of Dec. 12, containing a proposition to enter at once into peace negotiations. The note then continues:

"Our adversaries declined this proposition, giving as the reason that it is a proposition without sincerity and without importance. The form in which they clothe their communication excludes an answer to them, but the Imperial Government considers it important to point out to the Governments of neutral powers its opinion regarding the situation.

"The central powers have no reason to enter into any discussion regarding the origin of the world war. History will judge upon whom the immense guilt of the war shall fall. History's verdict will as little pass over the encircling policy of England, the revenging policy of France, and the emperor of Russia to gain Constantinople as over the instigation of the Serbian assassination in Sarajevo and the complete mobilization of Russia, which meant war against Germany.

"Germany and her allies, who had to take up arms for defense of their liberty and their existence, consider this, their aim of war, as obtained.

"On the other hand, the hostile powers always went further away from the realization of their plans, which, according to the declarations of their responsible statesmen, were among others, directed towards the conquest of Alsace-Lorraine and several Russian provinces, the humiliation and diminution of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, the partition of Turkey and the mutilation of Bulgaria.

ASSERT THEIR SINCERITY.

"In the face of such war aims, the demand for restitution, reparation and guarantee in the mouth of our adversaries produces a surprising effect.

"Our adversaries call for a proposal of the four allied (Entente) powers to make peace. Germany and her allies must protest in the most energetic fashion against such a characterization of their motives, which were frankly explained. They were persuaded that a peace which was just and acceptable to all the belligerents was possible, that it could be brought about by an immediate, spoken exchange of views and that therefore the responsibility for further bloodshed could not be taken.

"Their readiness was affirmed without reservation to make known their peace conditions when negotiations were entered into, which refutes every doubt as to their sincerity.

"Our adversaries, who had it in their hands to examine the proposition as to its contents, neither attempted an examination nor made counter-proposals. Instead, they declared that peace was impossible so long as the re-establishment of isolated rights and liberties, the recognition of the principle of nationalities and the free existence of small states were not guaranteed.

"The sincerity, which our adversaries deny to the proposals of the four allied powers, will not be conceded by the world to these demands if the world holds before its eyes the fate of the Polish people, the destruction of the liberties and independence of the Boer Republic, the subjugation of Northern Africa by England, France and Italy, the suppression of Russian alien nations, and also the violation of Greece, which is without precedent in history.

CONDITION OF LAWLESSNESS.

"Against the pretended violations of the laws of nations by the four allies (the Entente) powers are not entitled to complain, which from the beginning of the war trampled on justice and tore to pieces the treaties upon which it is built. England already during the first weeks of the war, repudiated the London declaration, the content of which had been recognized by its own delegates as the valid law of nations, and in the further course of the war violated in the most severe fashion also the Paris declaration so that, by her arbitrary measures for warfare, a condition of lawlessness has been created.

"The German Government, against Germany and the pressure exercised in England's interest against neutrals, are not less scandalously conflicting with the rules of the laws of nations as with the commands of humanity.

"Likewise, contrary to the laws of nations and incompatible with the sense of civilization, is the use of colored troops in Europe and the extension of the war into Africa, which was done by a breach of existing treaties and which undermine the prestige of the white race on that continent. The barbarous treatment of prisoners, especially in Africa and Russia, and the deportation of the civilian population from Eastern Prussia, Alsace-Lorraine, Galicia and Bukovina, are further proof of how our adversaries respect justice and civilization.

"At the end of their note of December 20th, our adversaries point out the special situation of Belgium. The Imperial Government is unable to acknowledge that the Belgian Government has always observed the duties which were enjoined upon it by her neutrality. Already before the war Belgium, under England's influence, sought support in military fashion from England and France, and thus herself violated the spirit of the treaty, which she had to guarantee her independence and neutrality.

"Twice the Imperial Government declared to the Belgian Government that it did not come as an enemy to Belgium, and asked it to spare to the country the terrors of war. Germany offered to guarantee the integrity and independence of the kingdom to the full extent and compensate for all damages which might be caused by the passage of German troops. It is known that the Royal British Government in 1907 was resolved not to oppose the use of the right of way through Belgium under these conditions. 'The Belgian Government declared the repeated offer of the Imperial Government. Upon her and those powers which instigate her to this attitude falls the responsibility for the fate which befell Belgium.

"The accusations against the German warfare in Belgium and the measures taken there in the interest of military safety have been repeatedly refuted by the Imperial Government as untrue. Germany again offers energetic protest against these calumnies.

An honest attempt to terminate the war and open the road for an understanding among the belligerents. The Imperial Government asserts the fact that it merely depended upon the decision of our adversaries whether the road towards peace should be entered upon or not. The belligerents declined to accept this road. Upon them falls the full responsibility for the continuation of the bloodshed.

"Our allied powers, however, shall continue the struggle in quiet confidence and with firm trust in their right, until peace is gained which guarantees to all the peoples, honor, existence and liberty of development, and which to all the nations of the European continent gives the blessing to co-operate in mutual respect and equal rights together for the solution of the great problems of civilization."

BRITISH FACE THEIR SHARE

As Many Huns On Their Front as On The French.

Operations Against Trenches More Successful.

London Cable.—In discussing with the Associated Press to-day the new line which the British have taken over in France, Major-General F. B. Maurice, chief director of military operations at the War Office, replied to the frequently-uttered criticism based on the fact that Great Britain with her great new army holds only a comparatively small portion of the western front. He stated that the 90 miles held by the British has as many Germans along its front as the 230 miles extending from the Swiss border to Rheims.

"Besides the numbers facing us," General Maurice continued, "it must be remembered that both climatic and ground conditions along our front are much worse than in any other section in the west. In January we feel this acutely, as the water is always near the surface in Flanders, and, besides the churned-up ground on the Somme front, we must contend with adverse weather.

"With the numbers facing us, which equal all the Germans on the line between the Swiss border and Rheims, we are bearing our own weight. As you noted in the morning papers, we continue to make successful trench raids, and these operations are becoming increasingly easier. For example, in the Beaumont-Hamel reported this morning, 100 of our men took the 140 prisoners. Reports just received show we are again raiding with equal success, one such position, being attacked, resulting in the capture of 159 men.

"On the Romanian front, in the marshes of the Siret and Truth Rivers, under conditions are interferences with operations. The Germans probably are finding the obstacles to their advance a little more serious than they expected.

"The action on the Riga front is only a local affair, but is encouraging as showing the growing Russian superiority over the Germans. However, such an operation is not in the same category as Gen. Brusiloff's big offensive last year. Information from captured German prisoners shows that while the rationed served to the front are sufficient, they are being cut off as much as the early part of the war while men who have been home on leave tell stories of the utmost privations."

GERMAN LOSS NOW 4,010,160

London Cable.—The total German casualties since the beginning of the war were placed at 4,010,160 in an official summary issued by the British Government to-day which reads:

"A summary of the German casualties reported in official German publications during December 1916 (total of 88,251, which adds to those previously reported, brings the total German casualties to 4,010,160. The naval and colonial casualties are excluded."

LANDING A DANGLER

By SADIE OLCOTT

"Bess, how long are you going to keep Ben Husted dangling about you? I think it is a girl's duty either to accept a suitor or send him away."

"Aunt Martha, it's not I who am keeping Ben dangling; it's Ben who is keeping me dangling."

"In that case I haven't any sympathy for you. A girl who can't bring a man to the point deserves to remain an old maid."

"What can I do?"

"What can you do? There are hundreds of things you can do. The only thing you can't do and win is to let Ben presume that any time he makes up his mind he wants you he can get you."

There are many reasons why a young man assumes that he doesn't wish to marry and very few that induce him to take a wife. He's not likely to look to the loneliness of old age without wife or children. He's having a good time in his youth spending all his money on himself, and it looks to him like halving his blessings and doubling his cares to wed."

"What course would you propose to me, Aunt Martha?"

"Man is a selfish creature, and you must attack him through his selfishness. First create a desire to possess you, then let him understand that he is liable to lose you. Give him certain privileges, but not too many. Don't sit on one end of the sofa while he sits on the other. Remember always that he is the fly, you the spider."

"Never mind that. How shall I bring him to the point?"

"By means of a rival."

"But I know no one that I can use for that purpose."

"I do."

"Whom?"

"Myself."

The girl laughed.

"What is hidden is more terrifying than what is revealed. If you used a man openly quite likely Ben would be smart enough to see that he was a fool. Use a concealed lover. I will be that imaginary youth who is pleading with you to change his misery into happiness. When you see Ben again appear to have something on your mind. If he offers to caress you put him away, but gently, as though you were in doubt as to whether you wish his caresses or not. Keep this up till he has gone, and if he expects a parting kiss don't respond."

"Then what?"

"Leave that to me."

Bess that same evening played the part her aunt had laid down for her and sent her lover away puzzled. He did not call again for a week, and Bess was perturbed. But her aunt braced her up and when the dangle came again told her to go to her room.

Aunt Martha went down to receive the caller and announced that her niece was quite indisposed and "must give up the pleasure of seeing Mr. Husted this evening." He manifested an abnormal curiosity as to the cause of the indisposition, whereupon Aunt Martha said that her niece was in a state of mental indecision upon an important question that had arisen and required an early answer.

"Is that the answer?" asked the young man looking hard at a letter the good lady held in her hand, the superscription on which Mr. Husted recognized as Bess' handwriting. Aunt Martha looked down at the letter, of which she was apparently not conscious, looked confused and stammered something about the mistake not being a final answer. As yet her niece had not reached a decision.

"Has my old friend turned up recently?" asked Ben.

"Old friend?" exclaimed Aunt Martha. "What put that into your head?"

The question was asked in a tone and manner to indicate that the guess had hit the mark. Then the lady began to talk about the weather, and Mr. Husted made irrelevant replies.

"Can't I see Bess for just a few moments?" he asked presently, breaking away from the weather.

"I don't think so," replied Aunt Martha, "but I will see. The truth is she's going away tomorrow and is very busy packing."

Leaving Mr. Husted pacing the floor, Aunt Martha pretended to go up to her niece's room. Instead she went to her own room, where she remained for ten minutes, where very long minutes to the waiting lover—then went down to him and told him that her niece had disrobed for the night and was ever so sorry that she would be unable to see him again till her return, which was uncertain.

"Would you mind carrying a message to her?" asked the perturbed Ben. "I'll take it to her with pleasure."

Ben took an old letter from his pocket, tore off a blank piece and wrote on it:

"What does this mean? Can it be that you have gone back on your promise?"

Folding it, he handed it to Aunt Martha, who took it to her niece and told her to write on it.

"What promise?"

"The reply was, 'To be my wife.'"

"You see, my dear," said Aunt Martha, "how easy it is to win a man—it he can be won at all, and I believe any man can be won if you go about it in the right way."

This ended the campaign, for there were no more notes. Ben answered the last one in person, and, of course, the rest of it doesn't come into the story.

Our First Glass Factory.

The first mention of the manufacture of glass in the United States is in Captain John Smith's "History of Virginia." He speaks of the founding of a factory at Jamestown in 1615 and of a second one seven years later. The work was coarse and was confined chiefly to bottles. In 1779 factories were established in Temple, N. H., and in 1785 the present great industries in Pittsburgh were founded. By 1813 the Smoky City had five glass making plants, of a total valuation of $100,000.

The Disappearing Lady.

The terms "madam" and "sir" are now employed much less than formerly, according to a book called "The A B C of Correct Speech," though, it says, children "should be taught to use these terms in speaking to ladies and gentlemen of the old school." "Lady" has also passed out of use in circles in which it was formerly current, except, curiously, the author observes, when a hostess talks to "her enterer or her maid." To them she describes her guests as "ladies," while to her friends they are "women" or "girls."—Outlook.

"If that bad boy insists on carrying a chip on his shoulder you shouldn't notice him."

"I didn't," replied the square jawed youngster, "so long as he kept it on his shoulder, but when he took it off and hit me in the eye with it I had to do something."—Washington Star.

Mr. J. Johnston and Miss Lela Meyers spent Sunday with Miss Hazel Sanderson, front of Sidney.

The services in the Methodist church were held at the usual hours 10:30 a.m. and 7 p.m. by Rev. Knox.

We are sorry to report the illness of Mrs. Geo. Benedict, her trouble is bordering on pneumonia, nurse Striker is caring for her. We hope for her speedy recovery.

African Grosbeaks.

The social grosbeaks of South Africa live in large societies. They select a tree of considerable size and literally cover it with a grass roof, under which their common dwelling is constructed. The roof serves the double purpose of keeping off the heat and the rain, and 400 or 500 pairs of birds are known to have the same shelter. The nests in this aerial dwelling are built in regular streets and closely resemble rows of tenement houses.

Sure Bait.

"How did you manage to sell that piece of goods that's all out of date to Mrs. Hild?"

Clerk—I told her it was a great bargain, but I thought Mrs. Richeson had laid aside for one of her daughters. Then she took it right off.

Happiness.

"There is an instinct in the heart of man which makes him fear a cloudless happiness. It seems to him that he owes to misfortune a title of his life, and that which he does not pay bears interest, is assessed and large, swells a debt which sooner or later he must acquit."

Unusual.

"He's different to most men anyhow."

"In what way?"

"He even knows all the words in the second verse of 'America.'"—Detroit Free Press.

The way to wealth is as plain as the way to market; it depends chiefly on two words—industry and frugality.—Franklin.

Address and Presentation

MR. AND MRS. O. FORRESTELL AND ANNA

Dear Friends:—

It is hardly necessary to remind you how deeply and sincerely we regret that you have found it necessary to change your place of residence which involves the severing of those relations which have been such a prominent feature of the neighborhood for so long a time, it is to give expression of our appreciation of the place you have held amongst us for so long a time, that this gathering has assembled in your home to-night.

We would remind you of what you doubtless realize more and more as the time comes for you to leave us, that no matter how comfortably and conveniently you may be situated in your new home, that there can never be any place which will mean quite as much to you as this place, which you will persist for many days to come to call the old home. Here you have experienced the joys and sorrows of life, every nook and corner is sacred with those associations and memories which can never be effaced, we remind ourselves that you have been a neighbor to the full extent, and would like that you know of our appreciation of the same, together with the high esteem in which you are held. To this end we ask that you accept this token as tangible expression of our loyalty to you as old neighbors and friends. We trust that it will be a reminder of those associations which are so full of pleasant memories, our kindest thoughts will follow you to your new home and be assured we will always be glad to welcome you back among us, and we promise that the latch string will always be on the outside of the door.

Signed on behalf,

Wm. DONALD,

Letter from Ethel Anderson to Evelyn Moore

Ontario Military Hospital, Orpington, Kent.

Dear Evelyn:—

The other boxes of Christmas stockings arrived safely, and I wish to thank the members of the High School for their generosity and kind thought for the dear boys at this hospital who have helped to bear the progress of the War, and save us all from the same fate as that suffered by the Belgians, and other nations who have stood in the way of Hunnish ambitions. We see a great deal here to make us very sad, but also much to give us hope. We realize the indomitable spirit of our fine men, and we know that nothing can beat their courage and determination. Another thing that has proved itself, that is, the great benefit that the human race would derive if they were all made to take exercise, and live much in the fresh air. There have been men brought in here with very dreadful wounds, and it was remarkable the way they healed. An ordinary civilian of sedentary habits could not hope to have such a wound healed in months, if ever. The patients had a very beautiful Christmas and all got a stocking and smokes, to say nothing of turkey and plum pudding. They were all delighted and very happy, many said they had never had such a fine Christmas. So you see our day was very successful, and while the sisters were all very tired, they too were happy. Will you thank all the High School members who were kind enough to send so much Xmas cheer to our boys. I hope you and all the kind Stirling friends have a very happy and successful New Year.

Very sincerely yours,
ETHEL ANDERSON, N. S.

In 1856 she was united in marriage to Lyman Wheeler and came to Stirling where they have resided ever since. She is survived by a husband, two sons, Harry and Chas., Caleb at home, and one daughter, Mrs. W. Butler of Fondulac, Wis. In religion she was a member of the Methodist church. ### Letter from Sergt. J. G. Butler

Bramshott Camp, Dec. 26th, '16
From Stirling Boys at Bramshott to Red Cross Society, Stirling, Ont.

It affords me great pleasure to be the boy from Stirling to write and thank the Red Cross, on behalf of the Stirling lads, for their kindness in thinking of us all at this happy time of the year, by their sending us, one and all a parcel, (the contents of which were in each case fully appreciated by all of us.) We know you will be glad to learn that we all received our parcel by Xmas day, and we had some time looking them over and sharing each one with the other. Of course you will fully understand that with the weather, as it is here and nobody being granted a pass, except those having relatives in this country, we put in a far different Xmas than we had ever done before. It rained all day, at least every 15 minutes and I can tell you it was a pretty gloomy time for the lads, but we said the old saying over and over again, like all true Canadians, "Are we Down-hearted?"—"No."

In the forepart of December after two drafts had been taken from us to France, let one 35 men and 2nd one 340, including 15 of our home boys, we were absorbed by the 154th Highlanders and it certainly split us all to pieces and everyone was knocked out of a job, so we don't know how we are situated as yet. This morning I was told by the Capt. M. O. that we were back again to the front with a draft and returned after seeing some of the sights. W. R. McDonald, I understand, is going back to Canada on the 29th of the month, but he certainly would have liked (when I saw him a week ago) to have stayed and stuck with the boys. By the London papers this morning, it certainly looks as though Germany's proposals for peace were quite distant, unless she comes to her knees a little more and concedes to far more than proposed.

All our boys are in good spirits and all drilling every day hard. Sergt. Bruce Richardson has been to the front with a draft and returned after seeing some of the sights. W. R. McDonald, I understand, is going back to Canada on the 29th of the month, but he certainly would have liked (when I saw him a week ago) to have stayed and stuck with the boys. By the London papers this morning, it certainly looks as though Germany's proposals for peace were quite distant, unless she comes to her knees a little more and concedes to far more than proposed.

We are all hoping and praying for a speedy conference and would all like to see the back again in Canada. We would all like again to thank the President of Red Cross, Miss E. Parker, the Red Cross Society and also all the kind friends of Stirling and vicinity for their remembrance.

Trusting this finds you all in good health and spirits, we will have to close as it is time for the milligan and sounds, which we never miss. Wishing all the compliments of the season, I am,

Yours sincerely,

HYMENEAL

WALLACE—MCGOWAN

On Wednesday Jan. 17th at noon a very quiet wedding took place at the home of Mr. W. J. McGowan when his youngest sister Lillian Maude McGowan of Stockdale was united in marriage to Mr. Harry Elgin Wallace of Frankford.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. J. Terrill in the presence of a few friends among whom were Mr. Fred McGowan of Forcena, Ont., and Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Holden of Stranraer, Sask. The bride wore a very becoming gown of grey silk and tulle veil and silk scotch thistles. After congratulations had been extended a very dainty wedding dinner was served to about twelve guests.

The bride received substantial cheques from her brothers W. J. McGowan and Fred McGowan, also many other useful gifts. On Thursday morning the happy couple left for Belleville and other Eastern points and showers of confetti. They will return to Stockdale until the 1st of February when they will leave for Hanna, Alberta where they will reside. Their many friends join in wishing them a prosperous life.

Expired Suddenly

Yesterday at noon the community was shocked to hear of the sudden death of Mr. Alex. Rodgers, Mail Carrier. He left with the mail at the usual hour and Mr. Bert Barles, Oak Hills was the last place he delivered mail. Directly after, Mr. Clayton Hermin met him driving along the road near Mr. Jas. Etheridge's. He was leaning against the dash board of the cutter. He asked what was wrong and Mr. Rodgers reply was "I'm sick and cannot go on." It was then 10.45 a.m. He was taken to Mr. Hermin's and on the way became unconscious. Medical aid was phoned for, but he expired at 11.30, never regaining consciousness.

A Pleasant Surprise

The evening of Jan. 16th was very happily spent, when about 100 of the friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Kemp to bid them farewell, and also to show their appreciation and good will, prior to their taking up their new home in the Tp. of Murray.

Shortly after eight o'clock, M. B. Sine asked the friends for their kind attention and with a few introductory remarks, concerning the evening of the evening, asked Mr. and Mrs. Kemp and family to be seated. While a number of the friends presented Mr. and Mrs. Kemp with one half dozen leather upholstered dining-room chairs and rocker; Lorena with a manure set; Hayden, a fountain pen; Gerald, baby brush and comb; Katie Burton, a manicure set. After the presentation was made, the Rev. J. R. Bick was asked to read the following address:—

To Mr. and Mrs. ROBERT KEMP AND FAMILY

We, your friends and neighbors have come to-night to give our expression of our kindly feeling toward you before you leave for your new home in Murray. We come as representatives of church, school and community. Indeed the loss sustained by your departure from us will be felt equally in every department of our social life.

We have learned to count you among our friends. The years you have lived with us have deepened our regard for you. We wish to say we have enthroned you among those who have gladdened our lives by their friendliness.

To the religious life of the community you have made a worthy contribution. No finer asset can any society possess than that group of men and women who are ambitious to strengthen the moral and religious life of the community. It has been easier for us to live worthily because you have lived in our midst.

This gathering of friends voice the general feeling. We are one in our regrets when we say we are sorry to have you go. However, we wish to assure you that we shall follow you with kindly interest and best good wishes, as a token of appreciation of what you have been to us, we ask you to receive these remembrances which shall in the days yet to be bring to memory our pleasant and happy associations together.

Signed in behalf of church and community by,

A. C. SINE,
WM. J. JOHNSON,
CHAS. MCDONALD.

At the conclusion of the address, Mr. Kemp on behalf of the family in a few well-chosen remarks thanked the friends for their appreciation, kindness and also for the many beautiful gifts they received, and extending a hearty invitation for all to come and meet them in their new home.

After this a number of the friends were asked for few personal remarks, all acknowledging the pleasure it was to be present and spend the evening together, also testifying as to the good neighbors, faithful and obedient workers, they have been in the different organizations of life and community, the remainder of the evening being spent in songs and social conversation.

Mr. and Mrs. Kemp will be greatly missed in this vicinity, not only as neighbors, but also as workers in the church, they both having taken considerable pains, they leave a vacancy, difficult to fill, but we trust they will be of great benefit to the community in which they go, where they will meet new faces and be welcome friends. We all join heartily in wishing them a very prosperous future also, good health and happiness.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

The footmen move to and fro with the tea and coffee cups; there is the usual little pleasant preliminary chatter at the whist tables. Lady Bumbleby, who dislikes whist because, as she explains, it makes her think, settles down in her chair and coaxes Hector Warren into talking—into telling her some more of his stories about the wonderful people he has met, and the more wonderful places he has seen, and Sir Frederic still leans over his photograph album. And Signa, nestling in the capacious armchair just beside which Hector Warren stands, listens with half-closed eyes, and is happy. Perhaps Hector Warren knows that she is within hearing, for certainly every now and then he turns his head and addresses his story as much to her as to Lady Bumbleby; and at such times Signa's eyes meet his with a rapt attention, and sometimes with a smile, which repays him in more precious coin than Lady Bumbleby's laugh.

Yes, she is very happy as she nestles back and listens, and lets her eyes wander idly around the beautiful room, so cheerful and pleasant with its many wax candles and subdued brightness. There is no spark of unworthy vanity in her composition, or else she would have noticed the needless, awkward figure at the table, and understood why the not unhandsome face is heavy and the glance that he sometimes lifts to Hector Warren sullen and angry. In her innocent unconsciousness, she really thinks that Sir Frederic is deeply interested in the presentation of Lady Rookwell's friends and relatives, and idly wonders how on earth a man can grow absorbed in a photograph album for the half hour together.

"What a wonderful memory you must have, although you couldn't recollect Lady Rookwell's niece," says Lady Bumbleby to Hector Warren; "but I don't want to keep you talking all the evening. Weren't you going to sing, Miss Grenville? I believe she is asleep," she says, glancing her neck to catch a glimpse of Signa.

"Are you?" he says, bending over her so low down that he almost touches the top of her head, and makes Sir Frederic wince as if some one had stabbed him.

"Not in the least," says Signa, looking up and meeting his eyes. "I have been listening to your stories. You never tell Archie and me any," she says, reproachfully.

"Doesn't he, my dear," puts in Lady Bumbleby. "Then that makes me all the more grateful. You must be a very agreeable sort of man, Mr. Warren, to exert yourself to amuse an old woman like me."

"There, you see what you have done!" he says, to Signa, in that low, confidential tone, which makes Sir Frederic mad. "You have tempted Lady Bumbleby into direct libel. Now the best thing you can do is to atone for it by singing her something."

Signa nestles still closer.

"I am so comfortable," she says, then she laughs and gets up, and he goes with her to the piano.

A sudden inspiration falls upon Sir Frederic. He is the nearest the instrument. Why should this man, this adventurer and dinner-table wit, coming from Heaven knows where, monopolize the most brilliant and beautiful girl in the room? He, Sir Frederic, will slip in between. So, with a couple of long strides, he reaches the piano, and opens it before either Signa or

Hector Warren can get near, and stands tall, but awkward and angular, trying not to color and frown. "Oh, thank you," says Signa, in the low, sweet voice which, though it is the same in which she would express gratitude to a cowboy for opening a gate for her, thrills to the very centre of Sir Frederic's heart.

"Have you, have you got your music?" he says, and he knows that his voice is harsh and hurried compared with the calm, easy tones of Hector Warren.

"It was put in the carriage," says Signa, looking round at the card-table. But Hector Warren, with many apologies for interrupting the game, has inquired of Mrs. Podswell, and comes up to the piano with the information that the music is in the cantabery.

"I'll get it," says Sir Frederic, hurriedly, and he gets it, nearly knocking some valuable china ornaments from the cantabery as he does so.

"Thanks," says Signa, gratefully, as he comes up red and hot. "What shall I sing?—or shall I play?" and she looks up at him with a kindly smile.

Sir Frederic turns over the music hurriedly, and takes a song haphazard.

"What's the matter, Sir Frederic?" says simple Lady Bumbleby, breaking off in the midst of an exclamation of delighted enthusiasm. "Are you in any pain?"

"No, no," he says, huskily.

"Oh, I thought you wasn't it beautiful?"

"Miss Grenville! Lady Rookwell may say what she likes about her niece, Laura Derwent, but I'm sure she couldn't hold a candle to this girl! What a prize she would be for a young fellow! I declare, if I were a man I should be simply mad in love with her!—should, indeed! And do you know?—at this time forward I whisper, with a confidential little chuckle, 'I think one young man is already, and that's Mr. Warren.'"

Sir Frederic mutters something unintelligible.

"And what a wonderful man he is!" she goes on, with a shake of her head. "One of the most charming and well-to-do men ever met; sings like an angel, too! Really, looking at them as they stand there, I think they would be a suitable pair, don't you? I love match-making!—Really, very suitable!"

Sir Frederic wipes the perspiration from his brow, and stammers something, then he gets up with a jerk, that makes Lady Bumbleby jump.

"What's the matter, Sir Frederic?" says simple Lady Bumbleby, breaking off in the midst of an exclamation of delighted enthusiasm. "Are you in any pain?"

"No, no," he says, huskily.

"Miss Grenville wishes you to sing," he says, without lifting his eyes to the handsome face.

"Certainly," says Sir Hector Warren immediately; and he goes to the piano as if obedience to Signa's wish was the first duty of his life. Sir Frederic stalks off, instead of remaining at the piano, as he should do, and throws himself down beside Lady Bumbleby's chair, and watches her look at the piano. Why cannot he color and drop the music, does not color and stammer like a shy hobbledyho? Why cannot he, Sir Frederic, bend over her and look into the eyes of that calm, gentle, reverential smile? And what gentle, reverential about? Why are they whispering about it? doesn't he sing and have done with it? And poor Frederic thrusts his hands into his pockets, and glances at them into his heavy brows.

"I dare not attempt it," says Signa, shaking her head, in answer to some pleading question of Hector Warren's. "It is most difficult, and—and I should not try it."

"No," he says, "I will chance that. Do try. I shall be so grateful." And he places a piece of music upon the stand.

"Then you must play," says Signa, getting up resolutely. "I dare not attempt it unless you play."

He sits down, and then Sir Frederic, with a cruel pain in his heart, watches her as she is going to sing a duet.

With a faint color in her cheeks, and with lowered eyes, Signa begins. It is an old-fashioned duet, a dialogue between a shepherd and his mistress, exquisitely simple and therefore touching and effective; and as their two voices mingle—hers so clear and sweet a soprano, his so light and musical a tenor—the card players cease playing and turn on their chairs to listen with keen enjoyment of what is really a very fine execution; but every note fills Sir Frederic with an anguish of jealousy and envy; his face grows white with the effort to maintain his composure; and when, at the close of the song, a burst of applause such as is not usually heard in drawing-rooms greets the performers, he half rises and utters an inarticulate cry.

"What's the matter, Sir Frederic?" says simple Lady Bumbleby, breaking off in the midst of an exclamation of delighted enthusiasm. "Are you in any pain?"

"No, no," he says, huskily.

"Oh, I thought you wasn't it beautiful?"

Sir Frederic wipes the perspiration from his brow, and stammers something, then he gets up with a jerk, that makes Lady Bumbleby jump.

"It's a very hot," he says; "there is no air in the room."

"No? I was just thinking it was so comfortable and nice," she says, innocently. "I wish you'd go and ask them to sing again, Sir Frederic."

He doesn't answer, and stalks to the card-table, standing over Lady Rookwell, with his back to the piano, to shut out the sight of the pair that Lady Bumbleby thinks will make such a good match.

"Curse that!" he mutters. "It—It shall not be! Never! Never! Never! I'll find some way to prevent it!—"

What's the matter—am I playing wrong? asks Lady Rookwell, looking up; and driven away again he mutters a negative, and with a gasp takes in the whole room, goes straight out into the hall. But even here there is no rest for him; Hector Warren's hand reaches out like a tormenting fiend's, and fills his jealous soul with fury.

Then, as he reflects that he has lost two chances; that he has sat with her at dinner, and had the opportunity of hovering near her at the piano, he curses himself for not having made the best of those chances, and, remembering his mother's advice, he struggles hard to be calm and composed.

"After all," he mutters, leaving the hall, utterly indifferent to the astonishment with which the butler and a stray footman regard him, "the chances are all on my side. If I could but keep cool! I am playing into his hands! I feel it! I feel it! But I will keep cool and self-possessed. He shall not have another opportunity of crowding over me! Here," he says, turning to one of the footmen, who instantly tries to look as if he were quite unaware of Sir Frederic's presence, "bring me something to drink; a glass of water—champagne—anything! The room is hot—"

"It is hot, Sir Frederic," says the man, with a look as if he were a man who asks for a drink. "Champagne cup, sir? Yes, Sir Frederic, and he brings a cool cup in which the frosted ice is floating temptingly."

Sir Frederic takes a long drink, and returns the cup to the man, with half a sovereign accompanying it, and was about to go.

"That will do," but the man hesitates a moment.

"If you'd like a cigarette, Sir Frederic—begging your pardon—they're on the table in the conservatory."

"No, no," he says, impatiently, and he takes a step toward the drawing-room; but the hated one is still singing, and he stops short.

"I think I'll have a cigarette," he says, ashamed that the man shall see his weakness; and he goes into the conservatory. But he does not help himself from the little white box which Lady Rookwell considerably supplies for those of her guests who are devotees of the Goddess Nicotina; and, leaning against the frame, stares at the dark, summer sky moodily.

Suddenly he hears Signa's voice behind him, and he starts and thrills.

"Do not mind," she says, with a soft laugh. "I am quite sure I shall not catch cold; besides, you will never find it amongst the others!"

Then Hector Warren's voice replies: "I think I shall, I know your shawl amongst a thousand of the mail."

"I don't care," she says, "but I wish you would not trouble; why, the night is so warm!"

"I do not care," he says. "I will not leave it to chance. Will you wait here? There is an awful draught," he adds, not seeing Sir Frederic leaning against the open door.

"Please don't close any doors!" says Signa. "I will wait here," and she sits on a low wicker-chair, "if you will insist upon going for the stupid shawl."

"That is the word," he says. "I insist."

And he goes.

Sir Frederic looks round the stand of flowers at the figure seated so near him. If that hated Hector Warren were not coming back, there might be a chance of having her to himself for a precious minutes. He looks round, and is just thinking of retreating, when he sees one of Lady Rookwell's wraps lying on a chair near him.

Even such a head as Sir Frederic's has inspirations, for love will quicken the duldest brain.

With a thrill of hope and determination he seizes the shawl and comes up to her.

"Miss Grenville, I beg your pardon for naturally Signa, whose thoughts are miles away, and who is unaware of his presence, but I don't know any one was here," she says, with a laugh. "It was so hot in the room that Mr. Warren proposed that we should come into the conservatory; and he has gone for my shawl, though really it is not enough here."

"Yes, yes, I know," he says, hurriedly, in mortal dread of the reappearance of Hector Warren. "It is actually not even here, but it is cool outside, and here is a shawl. Will you come?"

Signa cannot refuse, or say, "I am waiting for Hector Warren, and I will go with no other gentleman but him;" so she rises and with a trembling hand he puts the shawl around her shoulders, narrowly escaping an accident with the 72-eyed diadems in her hair.

"Ah, yes, this is better," says Signa, as with her hand just touching his arm, they pass out under the verandah. "What a lovely night! I wonder they do not have open air fetes in England as they do in Italy—the weather is often beautiful enough."

"Yes," he says, absently, his ears strained to catch the dreaded footstep. "Yes, yes, it would be an improvement on the usual dinner-party."

wouldn't it? If you like—if you care in the least about it, I will have one at the Park."

"Oh, no, not at all," says Signa, laughing. "It is mostly an idle expression of opinion, and means nothing."

"Your opinion can never mean nothing to me," he says, his breath coming quickly, his voice almost inaudible, so nearly that Signa does not catch the full meaning of his response, and does not understand his meaning.

"What lights are those?" she asks. "How pretty they look!"

"Those are the lights of the Park," he says; "they can be seen from almost all parts of Northwell."

"Yes? It looks very pretty from here."

"You make me very proud to hear you say that," he says. "I-I have always been proud of—of my home, but I shall value it from this hour more than before, now that you have praised it."

As he speaks, he hears the dreaded footstep; but it stops suddenly at the conservatory door, where Hector Warren stands with the shawl on his arm.

He stands looking at the two figures in the light streaming from the drawing-room windows—looking at them with a strange expression on his face, that is neither that of jealousy nor envy, nor even fear, but of deep, almost solemn grief. For a moment it seems as if he means to join them; then, with compressed lips, he murmurs:

"Not! It must come, sooner or later. Why should it not be now?" Then he looks at the Park lights, just as they are doing, and murmuring: "Will she refuse?—will she?" he turns and leaves them, his head bent, his face very grave and set.

Signa turns her head rather uneasily at this speech of Sir Frederic's. "Oh, every one must admire such a place," she says, trying to speak carelessly. "What a delightful old lady Lady Rookwell is, isn't she?"

WINTER HARD ON BABY

The winter season is a hard one on the baby. He is more or less confined to stuffy, badly ventilated rooms. It is so often stormy that the mother does not get him out in the fresh air as often as she should.

He catches colds and he becomes peevish and cross. To guard against this the mother should keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house.

They regulate the stomach and bowels and break up colds. They are sold by medicine men or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HIS SOLDIER MOTHER.

(By Margaret Yandis Bryant.)

A quiet night, with just a distant roar of cannon! So it is with war. Life goes on in the same old way. And as the dawn must usher in the day so we must give up hopes and hold them true.

Our hopes for victory, for home, and you give us courage to keep on. Our way, and to which rack his companion? Who brings to us most joy and cheer?

What's of home news, never letting creep in those lines? She, who has put in and out, and who has put in and out. Must reflect strength and love to us in prayer.

Who leave her sons with all a woman's grace. And let a memory for them—her smiling face. Her faith, her trust, her love? There may be heroes, dear.

Upon the battlefield, but those who fight their battles silent and alone. Sitting beside the freighting at home. They are heroes; for it is most true.

God made the bravest of the brave in such a way.

From the Canadian Magazine for January.

Those who would rejoice at the correction of a thief are yet shocked at the thought of destroying him. His crime shrinks into nothing compared with his misery, and severity defeats itself in exciting pity.—Samuel Johnson.

WHALING DAYS OVER.

A Once Thriving Industry That Has Nearly Vanished.

At the outbreak of the American Revolution and for a period of seventy-five years following the conclusion of that struggle whaling was the most important branch of the American fisheries. From 500 to 700 vessels sought whales in all the oceans and seas of the world, and in one year New Bedford alone sent out 300 vessels, whose cargoes of bone and oil were the basis of the industrial life of the city.

The pursuit of sperm whales reached its climax in 1827, when oil valued at nearly $4,500,000 was brought in, mostly from the south Pacific. The height of the industry was in 1840, when 70,000 persons derived their support from whales and 720 vessels, valued at $21,000,000, were engaged.

Take Care of Them

Take care of them. They need it. In their old age the dear folk lean necessarily on their children, and hard it is if they cannot glean a little comfort from those whose life is of their life.

If you are still blessed with the presence of the dear old dad and mother, dear friend, see to it that they have the warmest and sunniest welcome, a seemingly insignificant gift that has been made to them by you, their son or daughter. It is valued highly, because, first, it is from one who is dear to them, and, secondly, because they realize that the present has been a labor of love.

Be patient with them, and hear with their little whims and fancies. If their ways are not always your ways, it is because they were born and educated in a different generation to you. Therefore, humor them. In fact, do all you can to make them happy, so that as the top of the hill is passed and the shadows of night draw around, Darby and John will pass down into the happy softness of the valley beyond, thinking that the road of life was very pleasing after all.

Death of G. I. Merriman

Death came with startling suddenness to Mr. G. I. Merriman on Friday last, Jan. 23, 1917. The deceased had been about the street, apparently enjoying his usual health, and returning home had dinner and was sitting with his wife reading, when he was seized with heart failure and expired almost immediately.

He was of a genial and kindly disposition, and was loved and respected by a large circle of friends.

He was the younger son of the late James Monroe Merriman, Collector of Customs and Mrs. Merriman (neé Maud Livingston). He was born in Colborne on February 2nd, 1843, and was consequently in the 74th year of his age, when he passed away. In his youth he was a clerk in the post office and general store of the late Jas. Ketchum. He and the late Hon. Senator Cox afterwards formed a partnership together and both filled positions in Peterborough in 1864, he entered the employ of the Grand Trunk Railway and was soon afterwards appointed agent at St. Lambert, Quebec. In 1870 he married Jane Elizabeth Casey, daughter of the late Stephen Casey and grand-daughter of the late Joseph Koeber, who came to Canada and settled on Crown land in Colborne at the close of the Revolutionary war. In September 1879, Mr. Merriman was appointed G.T.R. Agent at Colborne, a position he retained until March 1910, when he retired. He therefore was an employee of the company for 40 years. He relinquished the position of the Canadian Express Agent here three years ago.

Mr. Merriman is survived by his widow and three children, Mr. Vinton R. Merriman, of Belleville; Mrs. Richard R. Hart of Hamilton and Mrs. J.B. Connell, of St. Kitts, B.W.I. also five sisters, Mrs. M.K. Lockwood and Mrs. John McCall of Brighton; Mrs. John Hamilton of Alvington; Mrs. John S. Black of Stirling and Mrs. G.A. Smith of Los Angeles, Cal. — Colborne Enterprise.

Letter to Mrs. H. Carleton

Canadian Discharge Depot, Empire House,
Buxton, Derbyshire, England
Mrs. HARVEY CARLETON, Stirling, Ont.

Dear Madam:—

In response to your request enclosed in the socks, permit me to offer my most sincere thanks for your kind gift. I just received them a few moments ago, and I feel so pleased with them that I can't let this opportunity pass without thanking the donor. Doubtless you will wonder how I came to receive them when I am in England, so I will explain the circumstances. When I was sent from France to the hospital in England twelve months ago, after having played my little game with old "Frizy" across the way, I was visited by a great many Canadian ladies who were devoting their services to the Red Cross Society. Since that time I have become quite fit again, enough to do clerical work, and was sent to the Canadian Discharge Depot. These same ladies continue to send me presents and that is how your nice socks reached me. I should appreciate the privilege very much to correspond with you, should this meet with your approval, for we value letters from home more than anything else, and it takes so long for some of them to come that we get impatient at times.

I would be pleased to send you some views of the different places that I have been in on this side of the world—and I feel that they would prove very interesting, for they really were wonderfully pretty spots in this country. Also the Official views of The Canadians in the trenches.

the different phases of a soldier's life are amusing to anyone who has never been through.

In anticipation of your early reply and thanking you again for the gift, I am, Yours very respectfully,

H. HODGINS
No. 117204 Pte. H. Hodges, Canadian Discharge Depot, Buxton, Eng.

AN IMPERATIVE MEASURE

Thousands of Canadians are fighting in the trenches and enduring hardships and suffering because was demanded their services. Hundreds of citizens in Ontario are deluged by the Government and the Railway Board with protests because passenger train services have been curtailed as a war measure. The contrast does not reflect credit upon those who have stayed at home. Sir Henry Drayton, of the Dominion Railway Commission, has publicly declared that curtailment of train service "is a war measure, and in any sacrifice the Canadian people have to make through it they will be contributing towards the better carrying out of Canada's share in the war." Surely that is enough.

Munitions and military necessities must have free and rapid transportation. One of the determining factors of this year's campaign will be the weight of Allied artillery fire. Millions and millions of shells are needed on the Western front. Are the Allied forces to be denied munitions because the people of Ontario will not submit to inconvenience? The Government and the Railway Board have found it imperative to make essential modifications in passenger services. The public should support them.

Card of Thanks

I desire to publicly express my thanks to the A.O.U.W. of Ontario, for its very prompt payment through Dr. J. D. Bissonnette, of the insurance and funeral benefit due me on the death, in battle in France, of my adopted son, Sidney Sanford, within three weeks after I filled out the statement of claim. I cannot refrain from mentioning the courtesy, honor and promptness of the order in its dealings with me.

Letter to Miss Eythel Armstrong
Glen Ross, from Pte Dolan

D. Coy, Canadian, M. G. Depot, Colbourn Camp, Sussex, Eng.

DEAR MISS ARMSTRONG,

Many thanks for the socks that you so kindly knitted and sent to the Red Cross, I received them in a parcel sent by the ladies of the Rawdon Red Cross Society.

You may be sure that such a useful article as a pair of socks will always be appreciated by a soldier especially as they are home knitted.

I am acquainted with a few of the Frankford boys, A. Ford, Waddell, and some others but we have none in the section, I am sorry to say.

We are having the usual famous English weather, plenty of rain which makes the ground new and soft for walking to say nothing of the mud, which is what we like. — I don't think. Owing to the strict lighting restrictions the camp is very dark at nights and I generally manage to walk into one or two ditches before I can manage to navigate.

Well I must draw to a close hoping to hear from you should you care to write. I remain, Very sincerely yours,

Importance of Securing Vigorous Potato Seed Stock

Experiments conducted at the Dominion Experimental Station, Kentville, N.S., with eight lots of Garnet Chili potatoes secured from different growers in 1915 show a variation in yield from 36 bushels to 240 bushels per acre, or a difference of 204 bushels per acre in yield when grown under uniform conditions. Seed from these eight lots planted in 1916 yielded from 68 bushels to 212 bushels per acre, a difference of 144 bushels per acre. The respective positions of the different lots were changed very little in the second year, but the lowest yielding ones increased somewhat and the highest yield was not so great.

Seed from fifteen others of this variety was planted in 1916 and the lowest yield obtained was 158 bushels and the highest 278 bushels per acre, a difference in favour of the best over the poorest of 120 bushels per acre.

Ten lots of pure stock of Green Mountain from different growers ranged from 180 bushels per acre to 313 bushels per acre, a difference of 132 bushels. Seven lots of fresh Cobblers ranged from 93 bushels per acre as the poorest to 235 bushels as the best, a difference in favour of the best yielding strain of 142 bushels. This would show that there may be as great a difference between potatoes of different varieties, and that it is wise to secure stock from farms which have had high yielding crops. Because the Green Mountain has failed in giving a crop on a certain farm is not proof that this variety will not yield well there; it may have been due to low vitality in the seed stock. Such a reversion in yield may have been due to disease, or adverse soil or climatic conditions which affected the crop at some time and it may be better to discard the stock entirely than to try to bring it up to its former vitality by selection.

JOIN THE 256th, RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION BATT.

Headquarters of the Unit at

24 Front St. West, Toronto

The 256th Railway Construction Battalion (Toronto Unit, with Lieut.-Col. W. A. McConnell in command), is recruiting throughout Ontario, and any man, skilled or unskilled, who can do a day's work, and pass the physical standard for recruits (which standard has been considerably lowered for this Unit), will be accepted. The age limit for the Unit is forty-eight years. Any man who cannot get a medical examination in his own locality, may proceed to the nearest recruiting Depot, and if he is not passed he will be allowed his railway fare, and pay for time lost, at the rate of $1.70 per day.

If he is passed as fit, his pay commences immediately, and recruits will be given sufficient time in which to attend to their personal affairs before reporting for mobilization. The Headquarters of the Unit is at 24 Front Street West, Toronto.

By joining this Unit you will help in a very important way to bring victory to our cause. It is upon such Battalions as the 256th that the men in the fighting trenches depend for their supplies, food and ammunition; and without which they are helpless in front of the enemy; and also are unable to send back promptly their wounded for medical attention unless backed up by Units like ours.

Following are the rates of pay and allowances in this unit:—

The pay and allowance on enlistment amount to $1.10 per day, average per month, $33.00

Clothing, rations and quarters, estimated, per month..... 30.00

Separation allowance, if married, or only support of a household, per month..... 20.00

Total..... $83.00

If promoted to rank of Sergeant:—

Pay and allowance, $1.50 per day, average per month, $45.00

Clothing, rations and quarters, estimated, per month..... 30.00

Separation allowance, if married, or only support of a household, per month..... 25.00

Total..... $100.00

The above amounts do not include the allowances made from Patriotic Funds, which are granted in accordance with the requirements of individual cases, and which average on the basis of $12 for a family of wife and two children.

So, join now and help. The Battalion will go as a unit. Bring your friends and relatives with you.

T. H. CLARSON JONES, Capt.

For Lt.-Col. W. A. McConnell, O. C.

The Dominion Government have appointed a Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada with offices in Ottawa. As this Board wish to cause as little delay as possible in dealing with communications with regard to pensions, they wish the public to correspond directly with the Board of Pension Commissioners, Ottawa.

A great deal of delay may be caused by communications being sent through other Departments to the Government.

The Patriotic Fund Association and the Military Hospitals Commission have kindly consented to give information and assistance to those wishing to write direct to the Board of Pension Commissioners. These societies have offices in certain localities throughout Canada.

In addition, in order to facilitate the granting of pensions, the Board is opening Branch pension offices in Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Winnipeg, London, Hamilton, Toronto, Barrie, Kingston, Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec, St. John, and Halifax. All information with regard to pensions may be obtained from these offices.

Address and Presentation

Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Mumby, West Huntingdon, before leaving for their new home, received a very pleasant surprise, on the evening of Jan. 23rd when their friends and neighbors, numbering about forty, gathered at their home and presented them with an address and two handsome chairs. The presentation was made by Mr. Edwin Reid and the following address read by Miss Mabel Montgomery.

MR. AND MRS. G. A. MUMBY

Dear Friends:—

It is hardly necessary to remind you how deeply and sincerely we regret that you have found it necessary to change your place of residence, which involves the severing of those relations which have been such a prominent feature of the neighbourhood for so short a stay.

It is to give expression of our appreciation of the place you have held amongst us for so short a time, that this gathering has assembled at your home to-night.

We would remind you of what you doubtless realize more and more, as the time comes nearer for your departure from us, that no matter how comfortably and conveniently you may be situated in your new home that there may never be any place which will mean quite as much to you as this place.

Here you have experienced the joys and sorrows of life, every nook and corner is sacred with those associations and memories which can never be effaced. We remind ourselves that you have been a neighbour to the greatest extent, and would like that you know of our appreciation of the same together with the high esteem in which you are held.

To this end we ask that you accept these chairs as a small tangible expression of our loyalty to you as old neighbours and friends.

We trust that they will be a reminder of those associations which are so full of pleasant memories. Our kindest thoughts will follow you to your new home and you may be assured, we will always be glad to welcome you back amongst us.

Signed on behalf of the friends and neighbours.

ED. G. REID

THOMAS MONTGOMERY.

Mr. Mumby in a few well chosen words expressed their thanks. Several short speeches were made and after a dainty lunch had been served, the remainder of the evening was very pleasantly spent, in songs and social chat. It was in the wee sma' hours of the morning when the guests departed and bade farewell to their genial host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Mumby.

SOLDIER SEIZED BY LION

Carried Into Jungle, But Rescued by Comrades

A thrilling encounter between a British soldier and a lion, which occurred in "German" East Africa during the progress of the 4th South African Horse towards Tabora, is described in the London Express.

Trooper Brighton had a remarkable experience. He was on picket duty on the night of September 22nd, and when relieved turned in for sleep wrapped in his coat and blanket.

The sentry, to his horror, saw a huge lion spring out of the dense bush that surrounded them, seize hold of Brighton and carry him off. When he had been carried about ten yards, however, the trooper's shouts and the shots fired by the sentry caused the lion to drop his terrified mouthful. The trooper by this time was in a fainting condition, and was carried by his comrades to camp, when Captain Macdonald, of the S.A.M.C., found that he had made an almost miraculous escape.

Wounds and scratches in the back and chest were all the injuries he had received, thanks to the texture of his military overcoat. Brighton's description of the ferocious pair of jaws that seized him and his sense of impotence in the lion's clutches is likely to remain a vivid reality to the end of his days. The lion was evidently an aged forest king that had prowled around the camp previously and tasted an aged mule and some emaciated horses.

The Deutschland is over a week overdue, having left Bremen on Jan. 2, and reports have been received here that the submarine has been captured by a light British cruiser and taken to the naval dock yard at Penbrook, South Wales. Officers of several incoming steamers said that they had heard this report from officers of British destroyers and patrol boats in the North Sea and off the Irish coast.

Were Refused Licenses

The Board of License Commissioners reduced the number of liquor licenses in Montreal by seven. Those refused licenses are: E.T. Suddell, Woods, Ltd., H. Corby, Ltd., A. H. Hebert, Montreal Export Co., E.R. Barnfield, and H. L. Brown. Several of the firms losing their licenses came from Ontario cities when that Province went dry.

The Commissioners found that some of the concerns had premises in office buildings, which were not considered as justifying the granting of grocers' licenses.

Buy War Savings Certificates

The new War Savings Certificates which have been created by the Government to encourage thrift and economy and to give everyone an opportunity to assist in financing our war expenditure, are now on sale at every bank and money order post office in Canada. The $25 certificate sells for $21.50, the $50 for $43, and the $100 for $86.

As an investment these certificates offer many attractive features—chief of which are the absolute security and the excellent interest return. For every $21.50 sent to the Government now, $25 will be returned at the end of three years.

There are two other features which are especially interesting to small investors. First, the certificates may be surrendered at any time, if the buyer should need his money; and second, each certificate is registered at Ottawa in the buyer's name and, if lost or stolen, is therefore valueless to anyone else.

But while they are excellent from an investment standpoint, the certificates should appeal strongly to Canadians because they offer to those who must serve at home a splendid opportunity for a most important patriotic service. The person who honestly saves to the extent of his ability and places his savings at the disposal of the Government by purchasing these certificates, may feel that he is having a direct share in feeding, equipping, and maintaining our Canadian soldiers, who are so nobly doing their part.

Rector of St. Paul's Church, Roslin, Enters the Wedded State

An event of more than usual interest took place in Roslin, Wednesday morning. It was the wedding in St. Paul's Church at 9.30 o'clock, of the Rector of that Church, the Rev. R. H. H. Bulteel, and Miss Bertha Fitchett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Fitchett, also of that place.

The Church was beautifully decorated with carnations, chrysanthemums and roses, for the occasion. The marriage service was choral and the nuptial kiss was well and truly bid by Rev. Hall, Rector of Newboro, Rev. Winters, Rector of Shummonville and Rev. Ryan, Rector of Tweed.

There was a celebration of the Holy Communion. The bridal couple were accompanied at the altar by Rev. Stanley Morton, Belleville, and Miss Ethel Holbert.

A number of invited guests from a distance were present, while the congregations of Monroeville, Thomashurst, and Roslin were very largely represented. The gathering of friends packed the edifice and gallery, until there was even no standing room. It is estimated that nearly four hundred people were present.

After the ceremony the wedding party repaired to the Rectory and a general invitation was extended to all to attend a reception which followed. Luncheon was served and a most delightful time was spent together.

The happy couple left for Belleville where they entrained for Toronto, Owen Sound and other points to enjoy a short honeymoon with friends. They are followed by an abundance of best wishes for a long and happy wedded life.—Tweed News.

A number of children from the public school are suffering from an attack of mumps.—Marmora Herald.

WEDDING BELLS

MCGILLEN—FORRESTELL.

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at the Sacred Heart Church, Marmora, on Wednesday morning, Jan. 31st, when Mr. Chas. E. McGillen, of Warner, Alberta, was united in marriage to Miss Hattie Forrestell, of Marmora. The ceremony was performed at 8.30 a.m., by the Rev. Father Murtach, in the presence of a number of friends of the contracting parties.

The bride was becomingly attired in a travelling suit of navy blue broadcloth with hat to match and were attended by Miss Jean Moore, of Spring Brook, while Mr. James Butler, of Peterboro, ably assisted the groom.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, the wedding party drove to the home of the bride's father, Mr. Charles Forrestell, Belleville, where a dainty wedding breakfast was served.

The groom's gift to bride was a pearl necklace, to the bridesmaid a handsome ring and the groomsmen, gold cuff links. The presents to the bride were numerous and useful, showing the esteem in which the young couple were held. The bridal couple left on the 2.29 train for Toronto and other western points and in a few weeks will leave for their new home in Warner.

The good wishes of their many friends will follow Mr. and Mrs. McGillen.

The Great Days of Old

In his inaugural address to the county council, last week, Warden McLaren, remarked that "while we are still at war, there's a few signs of a silver lining." We wonder if he had reference to the council, or were his thoughts wandering further afield. The editor of THE TIMES, had the privilege at one time of representing this village in the county legislature, and there was a merry war being waged then, although a bloodless one. With "Them" Vornlyes, marshalling his forces on one side, and Bob Coulter, a clever strategist opposed to him, you never knew when a shrapnel or a Jack Johnson, was liable to burst over your head and make you duck into your trench. Just about that time our old friend P. P. Clark peace to his ashes, would bob up from behind the parapet, and read a peace note. With everybody feeling happy and looking forward to a good afternoon's business, Walsh of Tyendinaga, would unlimber and drop a bomb among the enemy. That meant a counter attack, and there would be a terrific bombardment, which usually lasted about an hour, and then the only original Gen. E. Weaver, would spoil the whole show by moving an adjournment. Yes, these were great days, and we admit it was a great disappointment to us when the electors decided that our services were absolutely necessary at home, and refused to allow us to enlist for another year.—Bancroft Times.

GERMANY'S TERMS

Germany invites the Washington Government to fit American ships up with barber poles, rig the crews out in convict suits and send a star-angled liner out once a week to assert the "freedom of the seas" with a band on board playing "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean."

PIRATE HOHENZOLLERN

Hohenzollern is the name of the worst family of pirates and murderers in all history.
Compared to W. Hohenzollern, Sr., Capt. Kidd was a gentleman. W. Hohenzollern, Jr., is a miscreant whose infamy raises to respectability the character of the worst seafarer who "ever cut a throat or scuttled a ship," and a sought relaxation in the song:

Fifteen men on a dead man's chest
Sing ho, and a bottle of rum.

BRITAIN'S MERCANTILE MARINE

To-day the Ark of the World's Liberty is afloat in the engine room and stoke hole, the forecastle, the decks and the bridge of every merchant ship on the sea routes to and from the British Isles.

"The world is not worthy of them"—these words of Scripture suggest the extent of the debt that humanity owes to the crews of Britain's merchant ships. The liberties of every land on earth are sheltered by the sacrifices of the heroes who face death under the flag of Britain's mercantile marine.

"THE FREEDOM OF THE SEAS"

What would the Woodrow Wilson doctrine of THE FREEDOM OF THE SEAS be worth if Germany with a short coast line, two or three harbors and five hundred submarines can abolish ocean navigation?

Wisdom of Abraham Lincoln lives in a great saying to the effect that the United States could not exist half slave and half free. Liberty cannot exist in a world where German autocracy is left with a vestige of power to destroy the ideals of British democracy.

Letters to the Stirling Branch of the Red Cross

Stirling Red Cross Aid, Stirling, Ont.

Dear friends:—Your Xmas parcel received to-day January, 19th, '17. It had been to France, (where I was fourteen months, France and Belgium,) and followed me over here to London. Many thanks for same and as we always pass our parcels around, the boys all expressed their thanks, also, it makes a good break in routine of army life when a parcel arrives.

Was very sorry to hear of Roy Bissonnette's death. Such is war and the sooner it ends the better for humanity.

With best wishes for your good work, and for a happy and prosperous new year.

Yours truly,

The Red Cross Aid, Stirling, Ont.

Just a few lines to say that I received your very welcome parcel posted Nov. 24th, 1916, and was very glad to receive it, as it came just in the right time when it was needed most. I must thank the people of the Red Cross Aid of Stirling with all my heart, for their kindness in remembering me, and sending me such useful things.

Our winter is just starting here now, and the socks came in right in the proper place. As nearly every night we have pretty wet feet, and a change of socks refreshes our feet and makes us feel like fighting again.

Well I must bring this short note to a close, again thanking you all for your kindness, I am,

Death of Mrs. Elmer Clarke

Mrs. Elmer B. Clarke passed away last week at her home in Craigmont after a brief illness from diphtheria. Her daughter, the third child in the family also succumbed to an attack of the same disease.

Mrs. Clarke was the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Farney, West Huntingdon and was born at that place about 37 years ago. After graduating from Stirling High School she spent several years in teaching in the schools of North Hastings. About fourteen years ago she wedded Mr. Clarke and they took up their residence at Craigmont, where Mr. Clarke is manager of the Carborundum Co. Mr. Clarke himself, is a native of Picton.

In addition to her sorrowing husband and her parents, Mrs. Clarke is survived by four children and a large family of brothers and sisters.

She was a member of the Presbyterian church and was held in the highest respect and esteem by a large circle of friends who will learn of her untimely demise with the deepest regret.

An Optimist's Essay.

A pessimist is a son of the man who didn't believe there was any such thing as electricity.

He is an offspring of the man who was sure that the horseless carriage would never come, and a nephew of the man who was willing to bet money that men would never fly.

A pessimist is a direct descendant of the man who was sure that wireless telegraphy was a fool's dream and a submarine merely the creation of a fiction writer's brain.

The pessimist's ancestor scoffed at the telephone, the typewriting machine, the twenty story building, anaesthetics and every forward step the optimists have taken for the betterment of human life.

If the pessimists of the past had been right men would still be living in caves and trying to get their meals with clubs and flint arrows. And evidently they died without publicly confessing their mistakes, for their pessimistic children continue to prophesy dimly that everything that is surely going to be cannot possibly come to pass. They seem to be born with the habit and cannot get over it.—Detroit Free Press.

Speed of Bullets.

The rate of fall of the bullet from the line of projection is fixed by the laws of gravity, hence the more rapidly the bullet is made to pass from the rifle to the target the flatter will be its curve or "trajectory," the less accurate the estimation of distance required and the less the chances of error through an inaccurate estimate of distance.

The normal velocities of our sporting rifles, in black powder days, were about 1,300 feet per second. The first of the small bore, high power, smokeless variety raised this to 2,000 f. s. for bullets of military length and 2,200 for shorter sporting bullets. Now it has gone up to 3,100 f. s. The burning questions asked again and again by the rifleman are "Where will we stop?" "Will the 4,000 f. s. bullet come next?"

Cultivating Amusements.

Don't provide inducements to get a child to love amusements. It may encourage a habit that will sadly interfere with a sincere and useful life. Don't make a boy feel that he cannot waste too much time in having fun and catering to his senses. Life is real and earnest, and amusement is admissible at times, but should not be the rule. The manly youth is for fun, but he is not always engaged in striving for his own pleasure. He should not be educated into that idea of life. He should not be furnished with inclinations away from what is true and real in life. It is a serious matter tempering with a youth's noble aspiration. Providing amusement is apt to prove an unnatural adjunct in education.—Columbia Journal.

Annoyed Him.

"What did the boss say when you asked for a raise in salary?"
"He couldn't have said more or been madder if I had been his wife asking for more money."

Safety First.

Kicker—Folks are queer. Bocker—Yes; the ones who stop, look and listen at a keyhole won't do it at a railroad crossing.—New York Sun.

Stirling Womens' Institute

The Open Meeting of the Stirling W. I. was held in the Agricultural Building on Thursday evening Feb. 1st.

After the usual opening exercises a short business meeting was held in which the Programme Committee was named to take charge of the next meeting viz. Mrs. Belshaw, Mrs. Lagrow and Mrs. B. Corrigan.

A good Programme was then given followed by lunch.

The numbers were as follows—A chorus "Do your bit." A song "When Jack comes back" by four girls. A violin solo by Marian Halliwell. A solo by Miss Currie, "How far will you go with me?" A reading by Mrs. B. Corrigan "The Ballad of Jean D. Spray".

A Playlet "Meeting Mr. Thompson" by nine girls.

A talk by Lieut. Coulter in which he mentioned the generosity of the institute since the beginning of the war but urged the ladies to still greater efforts on behalf of their country's needs.

An exceptionally appropriate address was given by G. G. Thrasher taking for his subject the motto of the Institute "For Home and Country".

In his remarks the speaker emphasized the fact that although since the beginning of time "Home" has been universally acknowledged to be women's true domain yet the Institute has opened the door of greater opportunities and in serving country as well, women have awakened to find the niche designed for them by their Maker.

Letter from Lieut. Clancey

Somewhere in France, Jan. 9th '17

Mrs. C. P. CLANCEY

R.M. No. 3, Stirling, Ont.

Dearest Mother, Dad and Sisters—
Well our Battalion just came out of the line for a few days rest and I was lucky sent on a course. I am taking a wireless course about eighteen miles back of the lines. It is raining outside now, but we do not care as we are billeted in a house. (Can you imagine in a real house, with windows, doors and chairs, instead of a dismal dug-out and where you are down twenty feet under the ground and you burn candles night and day. It seems funny to sleep in a real bed again.)

I woke up this morning thinking that I was someplace in Western Canada, but it was only a dream. The country is lovely around here. It would be great to tour through here in peace time, but everything at present is knocked down and all the civilian inhabitants "refugees" have gone to safer parts of the country.

Say, I rode into day before yesterday and was having tea when who should walk into the tea room but Bill Lowery. He is looking fine. He is in the 48th Batt. and when in line his Battalion is side by side with ours. Yesterday I was going up the road when I nearly ran into Floyd Garrison. It seemed funny that I should see them both over here. I went up the road this morning and was watching some signalling men dig when who should come up to me but an old boy from the 80th signallers. It made me sick to hear how the old crowd have been broken up. A good many of them have paid the supreme. I have seen hundreds of men die around me, but it never touched me as it did when I heard about the old 80th boys. Roy Bissonnette was hit in the neck by a sniper's bullet. The time always comes for one out here, but believe me I don't believe in trying to get a Blighty by exposing any part of my body to Fritz. I gave a Fritz working party the other night when I got our trench mortars to drop five projectiles on them. It gives you a thrill of excitement to get a neck at the bun. Believe me Dad he can fight especially when he knows that no quarter will be given on our part.

Jan. 10. Well I seem to be writing to you every spare minute I get. I am still in the wireless school, it is very interesting. It is fine outside now. The country is very beautiful out here. It would be a great shame if Fritz should ever pound it up as he did down where my old Battalion is stationed, a town populated by 2500 persons has been reduced to ruins. I would hate to go home and find our home in the same way as many a poor Frenchman would, and will find his I am in a billet now along with seven other officers. The Madame who keeps it is about the same age as you, Mother. Her husband is away fighting with the French army, when the Germans came into France they took her two daughters whose ages were eighteen and twenty and before I went back into the trenches she says that as long as there are soldiers billeted here and she has lots to do, she is alright but when she is all alone she cries all the time and cannot sleep. She is a dear old soul.

Jan. 11th. Just finished our course in wireless so thought I would drop you a line before I went back into the trenches to-morrow morning. Say one of the French woman's daughters captured by the Germans came back yesterday afternoon at five o'clock. Believe me her Mother was glad to see her. She was exchanged for a German soldier and came out by way of Switzerland. It is great to hear her talk.

One of the fellows billeted here has a mandolin so we certainly have enough music now. I would like to hear Pearl at the piano and be in an easy chair and Dad smoking his pipe and wearing that old felt hat I sent back into the trenches sitting around, it would be heavenly but cheer up we will all be home in the near future I hope. It has been snowing a little to-day. It gives one tender memories of those good old times when we had sleighing and skating over home. I don't think that I could ever be content to stay out of this game now that we are in it. We may have wet feet over here, but thank God we haven't cold feet like some poor scamps around home. Some day there will be a reckoning though. War I must close for now. I remain your son Edward. Address

Lieut. E. C. CLANCEY,

58 Battalion, 3 Canadian Division, British Expeditionary Force, France.

How to Ship Parcels to the Prisoners of War

The Post Office Department is in receipt of a cablegram from the British authorities stating that no parcels containing food stuffs or articles of clothing should be forwarded in future from Canada for Prisoners of War in Germany.

The British authorities represent that it is absolutely necessary that the above regulation should be complied with. Therefore, on and from the 1st February, 1917, the Post Office Department will refuse to accept any such parcels for prisoners of war in Germany. The Department is advised by the English authorities that such parcels cannot be accepted for transmission to the prisoners, and could not get through.

The Canadian Red Cross Society through its London Office undertakes that every Canadian prisoner shall receive adequate relief in food and clothing, sending one parcel every week to each prisoner. Therefore, existing Organizations should continue their work of collecting funds to be sent to the Canadian Red Cross Society; and it is most desirable that they should not relax their efforts in this respect.

Persons desiring to have additional food or supplies sent to a Canadian Prisoner should send money for that purpose to the Prisoners of War Department, Canadian Red Cross Society.

A letter containing a remittance and asking the Prisoners of War Department, Canadian Red Cross Society, to send food or other articles to a prisoner of war should be addressed to the Prisoners of War Department, Canadian Red Cross Society, and should contain information in the following form:—

No. 12345 Private A. G. Robinson, 48th Highlanders, Canadian Contingent, B. E. F., Canadian Prisoner of War, Göttingen, Germany, c/o Prisoners of War Department, Canadian Red Cross Society.

The remittance should be in the form of a Post Office Money Order drawn in favour of the Prisoners of War Department, Canadian Red Cross Society, for the Prisoner of War in question.

Any person wishing to send a remittance direct to a Prisoner of War may do so by means of a Post Office Money Order, which is issued free of Commission. Instructions as to how to proceed can be obtained from Postmasters of Accounting Post Offices.

Parcels for prisoners of war containing articles which are not prohibited, may be sent fully addressed to the place of destination in the form above care of Prisoners of War Department, Canadian Red Cross Society, London, England, to be forwarded after they have been censored.

Detailed regulations respecting communication with Prisoners of War are being issued to the Postal Service generally, and full information may be obtained by making application to any Postmaster.

A plan of the prisoners of war at Fort Henry to make an escape has just been discovered in room 13B, which had been dubbed Hindenburg Cafe, but which was recently closed. It was found that the prisoners had started to work on a tunnel leading out to the Moat. It is stated that the prisoners must have been working on this for over a month.

Seriously Burned with Gasoline

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Alexander, of Rush Lake, Sask., narrowly escaped with their lives and home on the evening of Thursday, Jan. 18th, when a lamp exploded with the fumes of gasoline. It is learned that Mrs. Alexander was washing a couple of blouses in hot gasoline in a lamp light, when the gas caught in the lamp, which started to burn up. Seeing what was likely to happen, she reached out her wet hand from the gasoline to turn the light out and the flame caught her hand, setting fire to her and the surroundings, the result being both hands badly burned, also Mr. Alexander's right hand and arm seriously afflicted from wrestling with the flames, and one little toe, scarce 4 years, had the back of her hair singed. Considerable damage was caused by the fire in the kitchen where she was engaged, but fortunately no lives were lost. A physician was sent in attendance and reports speak quite favorably for their recovery.

(Mrs. Alexander is a daughter of Mrs. Geo. Boulton.)

Acknowledgment

The Patriotic committee acknowledge the receipt of $2.35 from St. Andrew's Mission Band. The money gathered for this fund is used for purchasing wrist watches for our Stirling boys who enlist, and so far has been kept up by voluntary offerings.

A number of watches will be given shortly and we will need more money. The object is a good one and this is one way we can remember our boys in the noble stand they have taken.

The committee will be pleased to receive further donations from any whose heart is in this cause.

L. MEIKLEJOHN,

Treasurer

It pays to advertise; if you don't believe it just read this: "Quite a sensation was caused at Scott, Sask., recently. ## Letter from Donald F. Bissonnette

21st Alberta Reserve B'n,

Senford, Sussex, Jan. 8th, '17

Mrs. Joseph Phillips, Stirling, Ont.

Dear Mrs. Phillips:—I am indeed very grateful for the line box of "cats" and the pair of socks which reached me this evening.

Doubtless you will be expecting an answer from the trenches, and may feel a little disappointed that your box was not sent from the Red Cross auxiliary to some one in the firing line. However, when I tell you that the 175th Batt. has been in quarantine for measles since Nov. 20th, and that since I was attached to this Battalion, on Dec. 22nd, on the completion of my course at the Canadian Military School, I have been outside our lines only once, except on route marches.

From the above you will see that we are almost as shut in as the lads in the trenches. I am very glad to know that unless some other cases occur to-night we will be out of quarantine to-morrow, and I can assure you the boys will be a tickled bunch.

The quarantine has prevented any one from this unit being drafted to France, but as soon as we get back to normal conditions the drafts will likely start once more. As men in the 31st and 50th Battalions at the front are required, drafts are sent from this unit, and I expect before very long that I will be over there.

Since I arrived in England on Oct. 6th, until Dec. 22nd, I have been in attendance at the Canadian Military School, first at Shorncliffe and later at Crowborough, in Sussex. In the draft of officers of which I formed a part, there were over 300, and at one time at Shorncliffe, there were over 600 officers, mostly Lieutenants, in attendance. Since that time nearly 300 have been drafted to units at the front, and on Dec. 22nd there were 126 finished their course to be attached to the different reserve Battalions in England, all available for draft to France.

In this part of England there is scarcely any winter, we have had no snow, but lots of rain, and we go around most of the time, without greatcoats or gloves. I can imagine the weather at Stirling to-night, snappy and cold with good sleighing, while here it has been raining almost all day, with a 30 mile an hour gale sweeping right up from the Bay of Biscay.

From our camp here we can often hear firing going on out in the channel. Perhaps before this reaches you, I may be listening to the ring of the big guns behind the line.

Again let me thank you, Mrs. Phillips for your box, with best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

DONALD F. BISSENETTE.

CROWBOROUGH CAMP

There's an isolated, desolated spot I'd like to mention, Where all you hear is "Stand at Ease," "Slope Arms," "Quick March," "Attention."
It's miles away from anywhere, by God, it is a run 'un.
A chap lived there for fifty years and never saw a woman.

There are lots of little huts, all dotted here and there.
For those who have to live inside, I've offered many a prayer
Inside the huts there's RATS as big as any munny goat.
Last night a soldier saw one trying on his overcoat.

It's sludge up to the eyebrows, you get it in your ears,
But into it you've got to go, without a sign of fear,
And when you've had a bath of sludge, you just set to and groom,
And get cleaned up for next Parade, or else it's "Orderly Room."

Week in, week out, from morn till night, with full pack and a Rifle,
Like Jack and Jill, you climb the hills, of course that's just a trifle, Slope Arms, "Fix Bayonets," then "Present," they fairly put you through it,
And as you stagger to your hut, the Sergeant shouts, "Jump to it!"

With tunics, boots and puttees off, you quickly get the habit,
You gallop up and down the hills just like a blooming rabbit,
"Heads backward bend," "Arms upward stretch," "Heels Raise," then
"Ranks change places."

And later on they make you put your kneecaps where your face is.
Now when this war is over and we've captured Kaiser Billy,
To shoot him would be merciful and absolutely silly,
Just send him down to CROWBOROUGH there among the rats and clay
And I'll bet he won't be long before he droops and fades away.

BUT WE'RE NOT DOWNHEARTED YET!

THE ORIGIN OF OUR SURNAMES

How Men in Long Ago Times Distinguished Men.

Trades, Places, Events, Personal Characteristics.

It cannot be admitted that considerable food for thoughtful reflection is offered in the study of the origin of names. It was all very well when the world was young; but, as a writer says, "As the population increased and communication became possible and easier the supply of single names was not equal to the demand, and people began to get individuals bearing the same name mixed. It was at this time that the surname was thought of and adopted, so that families might be distinguished one from the other."

Trades and callings are in this day represented in the names of Baker, Carpenter, Shoemaker, Tyler, Chandler, Almon, Cutler, Carter, Saddler, Slater, Butcher, Draper, Thatcher, Fletcher, Hooper, Cheeseman, Turner, Joiner, Cooper, Gilder, Mercer, Skinner, Coleman, Sawyer, Tanner, Spicer, Cook, Tutor, Miner, Driver, Weaver, Gardner, Archer, Merchant, Porter, Walwright, Taylor, Shepherd, Glover and even so many others.

Says Clifford Howard, who has devoted himself to this pleasant study: "Such names as Hall, Stair, Garrett, Kildane and Chambers also record the occupations of our forefathers, who in these cases were engaged in the households of the nobility and had charge of such apartments as the names indicate. Others held higher offices, and from them we have the surnames Page, Butler, Proctor, Forcster, Steward, Bailey, Fowler and Woodward and Hayward, the keepers, respectively, of the forest and the castle."

In other localities it was usual to rob out an individual by the place of his birth or residence, a custom which resulted in the adoption of such surnames as French, Scott, Welsh, English, Dan, Burgoyne, Cornish and Cornwallis, Kent, York, Chichester, Lincoln, Wells, Washington, Putnam, Furst, Buchanan, Preston and Bancroft. A great many of these were originally the names of baronial estates, which names the barons adopted as surnames.

Those who were not of such high estate were forced to content themselves with humbler titles. Thus John, who lived by the brook, became John Brook, and David, who lived by a giant oak, was called David Tree.

Richard, who lived at the end of the town, became Richard Townsend, while his brother, who lived under the brow of a hill, became known as Peter Underwood. Those who lived near the water took the name of Atwater.

At the time the family names began to be used the shop of the merchants were not numbered as they are now, but were known by their signs, which were suspended at the front doors and bore pictures of all sorts of animals, vegetables, birds, flowers, fishes and insects. It was customary to speak of an innkeeper, for instance, as the "Bear and the Bird" or the "Sheep and the Fish." It is hardly understood, however, that names were soon converted into surnames. Thus, Bull, Bull, Wolf, Wolf, Goose, Goose, Lion, Lion, Swan, Swan, Hawk, Hawk, Partridge, Partridge, Hawk, Crane and Drake, as well as Tort, Turtle, Haddock, Herring, Pike, Pouch and others. From vegetables, trees, fruits and flowers we have Bean, Broome, Clover, Birch, Ash, Hawthorne, Hazel, Peach, Flower, Nettie, Plant, Budd, Branch and Rose, besides dozens more.

The shop signs bore other devices, and from these we have such names as Bell, Hammer, Coates, Mantell, Jewel, Potts, Pipes and others.

A great many nicknames remained fixed as family names. The most important being those which referred to the color of hair or complexion, and from these come such well-known names as Brown, Black, Gray, White, Red, Blond, Fair, Dark, Old, Young, Good, Evil, Well, Long, Short, Crookshanks, Longman, Whitehead, Broadhead, Swift, Seber, Noble, Hardy, Doolittle, Goodman, Darling, Long, Short, Mincheter, Savage, Wise, Sweet, Merry and others.

To these might be added King, Queen, Pope, Bishop, Knight, Fr. or, Abbott, Squire, Earl, Duke, Baron, Lord, Prince and others, which were originally given to individuals because of their bearing the titles or because of services they may have rendered them.

There are many more which do not come under any particular heading, but owe their origin to some event, which the names appropriately indicate—Joy, Bliss, Morrow, Winter, March, May, Weeks and so on—Exchange.

Irritable Nerves Restored and Health Regained in a Simple Way

The man or woman who is run-down, not feeling up to the mark, perhaps irritable, nervous or sleepless can well afford to learn about the wonderful results the newly discovered blood-food is giving to folks that use it.

There is wonderful power in this new blood-food, and every weak, pallid person can be quickly nourished back to health that uses it as directed. After each meal, with a sip or two of water, you simply take two little chocolate-coated tablets, sold in all drug stores under the name of "FERROZONE."

The effect is noticeable at once. You feel happier, brighter, more contented. That old-time feeling of weariness departs; you forget your "nerves" and no longer get irritable or cross over trifling annoyances. There is a reason for this change, and that reason consists of the fact that Ferrozone contains blood-making materials you can get in no other way.

Ferrozone makes the blood tingle and sing with vitality. This ensures lots of nourishment and strength and being supplied to every part of the body. No wonder the eyes brighten and the cheeks radiate color and happiness. With abundance of strength, a keen appetite, good digestion and plenty of sound sleep—all the result of Ferrozone—you quickly feel as if life held new charms and pleasures.

JADE TALISMAN BRINGS POWER.

Centuries Old Idol Means Much to the Chinese.

Sun Yat-Sen's Failure Blamed to It's Loss.

The death of Yuan Shi-Kai, president of China, is inseparably linked with the recovery of the long lost image of the Chinese Goddess of Mercy, Kwanyin, in the middle of the Chinese, who see in these events the strange workings of the mysterious power to be controlled by the idol. Strangely enough, the image was reported found on the very day that the president died.

The Goddess of Mercy was stolen from Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, the revolutionary leader, and the failure of the Sun Yat-Sen revolution was laid to the loss of this image.

The Kwanyin, for which a reward of $100,000 was offered, was carved from a solid block of rare apple green jade. It is centuries old. In its base, cunningly fashioned so as to defy detection, there was a tiny secret chamber, and in this chamber reposed the one symbol held in the greatest of veneration throughout the land of the Chinese.

What form that symbol takes is today a profound mystery. This much is known: It is the talisman possession of which rules the greatest of all Chinese secret societies. It is whispered that possession of the supreme symbol came to Dr. Sun during the period of his life when he was a fugitive from the wrath of the Manchus. There are those among the slant-eyed dreamers of China's lotus land who say that possession of the symbol concealed in the base of the Jade Kwanyin has been responsible for much of the uncanny power which Dr. Sun exercised over the people of China, and that it obtained sanctuary for him on countless occasions from blood price. The talisman is called "The Horns of the Hare."

Time after time, through hired Japanese agents, for whom the talisman held little of awe, attempts were made to steal the Jade Kwanyin and its priceless contents.

to his trail day and night for many years attained their object. Dr. Sun at that time was secluded in a house surrounded by a vast garden, encircled by a high and almost unscalable wall, which was constantly under guard. His household was trustworthy to the last man.

Dr. Sen was alone in the garden. Somewhere along the wall a guard patrolled. At last the entry passed near a spot where a lean yellow man crouched hidden and waiting. A cry came from the garden: "A shot a 'smoke ring' of concentrated poison vapor. One after another the rings settled about the unsuspecting guard. He fell limp and unconscious to the grass. From behind Dr. Sun, too, the jets of poison came volleying. With a cry the man of China's destiny collapsed, temporarily suffocated.

Over the walls appeared the ends of long ladders. Up swarmed lithe, active young men, dropping into the garden and rifling the unconscious leader's garments. A moment, and they swarmed up the trunks of trees growing beside the wall and dropped again to the outside.

Home Care of Milk.

No matter how well milk has been handled up to the time it is delivered to the consumer, it cannot be expected to keep well if it is carelessly treated thereafter. It should be covered, kept in a cool, clean place free from dirt, flies, etc. New milk should never be mixed with old unless it is to be sold in bulk as the bacteria in the old milk will of course be added also and the mixed milk will not keep as well as the fresh milk alone. Bacteria are thickest where there is dirt and decay, and milk should therefore be stored only in clean, sweet places. It is safer to keep it covered, to exclude not only dirt and bacteria, but also the flavors and odors which it so easily absorbs. If kept at a temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit, or less, good milk should remain sweet for twelve hours at least, after it reaches the consumer, and ordinarily for twenty-four hours or more. Sometimes in very hot weather housekeepers complain that in spite of all precautions it sours quickly, even in the ice box. This is often due to the fact that the air of the ice box, although it seems cold in contrast with the heat outside, is really not cold enough to check the growth of the bacteria; if a thermometer placed inside registers more than 50 degrees Fahrenheit, the fault is almost surely in the temperature of the ice box and not in the milk.

To Every Woman Who is in Pain

MRS. WILLIAMS SAYS USE DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

She Suffered for Two Years, but Three Boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills Made Her a New Woman.

Adamsville, Kent Co., N. B., Feb. 8. (Special.)—"I can recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to every woman who suffers." So says Mrs. Williams, a well-known and highly-respected lady residing here. Mrs. Williams was a sufferer for two years till she used Dodd's Kidney Pills. She found in them quick relief and complete cure. That is why she is enthusiastic in her praise of them.

"My troubles started with a cold," Mrs. Williams states. "I never seemed to get over the effects of it. I had cramps in my muscles and my joints were stiff. There were dark circles under my eyes, which were puffed and swollen. I had a bitter taste in my mouth, and I suffered from severe headaches.

"I felt heavy and gloomy after meals and had attacks of neuralgia. Heart flutterings and rheumatism were soon added to my troubles. I took just three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills. I cannot be too glad that I did so."

Every one of Mrs. Williams' symptoms was a symptom of kidney disease. That is why Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her.

ling the soldiers' families and of supervising the distribution of the land. Clearly, with the increasing size of our armies, and the alarmingly rapid growth of the cost of living, the fund must be increased. In 1917, therefore, it is asked that the fund be increased by one million dollars, and that the fund be increased by one million dollars in 1918. The increase is proposed, and there is no good reason why this sum should not be guaranteed by the end of the year. In that month, the fund will be held in a large number of the towns and cities, and enormous work, coupled with generous loaning of the surplus, should ensure that by the end of the month the fund will see its way clear through its life towards Ontario families until Dec. 31, 1917.

How to Cut Roses.

There is a right and a wrong way to cut roses. The choice of the latter may seriously injure the blossom producing properties of the plants. This applies particularly, of course, to rose plants chosen and grown especially for cut flower production. Such roses will be largely of the perpetual blooming sorts.

When a rose is cut from such plants—ten roses or other perpetual bloomers—only two or three eyes of the current season's growth of that branch should be left on the plant. This should give the roses very long stems. Succeeding blossoms should be cut close to the ground. It will seem like destroying the bush, to take so much off it, but if the object is the production of roses, the cutting away of the surplus wood will attain the desired end.

At the spring pruning has not been sufficiently severe the plant is likely to have long, naked stalks and short stems to the flowers. With this character of growth only one or two strong leaf buds should be left on the branch when the flower is cut, so as to stimulate as much growth as possible from the base of the plant.

The greatest temptation to leave wood is where there are two or more buds on one branch, some being small when the terminal one is open. This temptation to follow the old practice can be avoided by placing off all side shoots after a bud has formed on the end of a branch. This prevents the formation of two or more buds on one stalk. This summer pruning will encourage additional blooms on varieties which bloom more than once a year.

THE PENSION BOARD

The Dominion Government have appointed a Board of Pensions Commissioners for Canada, with offices in Ottawa. As this board wishes to cause as little delay as possible in dealing with communications with regard to pensions, they wish the public to correspond directly with the Board of Pensions Commissioners, rather than by communication, being sent through other departments of the Government.

The Patriotic Fund Association and the Military Hospitals Commission have kindly consented to give information and assistance to those wishing to write to the Board of Pensions Commissioners. These societies have offices in certain localities throughout Canada.

In addition, in order to facilitate the granting of pensions, the board is opening branch pension offices in Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Winnipeg, London, Hamilton, Toronto, Barrie, Kingston, Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax. All information with regard to pensions may be obtained from these offices.

JABLONICA.

One of the Important Gateways of Carpathian Mountains.

Jablonica and the pass of the same name, which the Russians are said to have occupied, constitute one of the most important gateways through the high Carpathian mountains from Galicia and Bukovina into Hungary, says a war geographical Society issued from its Washington headquarters.

"The Carpathians in this vicinity tower to a height of 7,500 feet, but slope gradually down to the south-west. At a distance of forty-five miles from the crest the capital of the province, Marmaros-Sziget, is situated at a level of only 900 feet above the sea. Jablonica clings to the northeastern slope of the Carpathians between the headwaters of the Fruth and the Golden Bistritza Rivers, and is as well station on the seventy-two-mile railway line connecting Stanislaw, now in the hands of the Russians, with Korosmezo, just beyond the pass, to the southwest. Near Korosmezo are valuable petroleum springs.

"The important river Theles, chief affluent of the Danube, and next to the latter the largest waterway in Hungary, has its source in Marmaros county. Situated on the Theles and connected by rail with Korosmezo is the flourishing town of Marmaros-Sziget, with a population of 21,000. This will be the first important objective of the Russians after they cross the Carpathians by way of the Jablonica pass and begin their descent upon the plains of Hungary.

"Marmaros-Sziget is most pleasantly situated at the junction of the Theles River with the Theles. To the east tower the well-wooded, snow-capped Carpathians. In this town before the war citizens of many nationalities were busily engaged in an extensive lumber trade and in handling the enormous output of salt (a state monopoly), taken from the mines of three villages contiguous to the county capital. The annual fairs which were held here were an important feature of the industrial life of this part of Hungary, and presented a most picturesque scene to the traveler. A babel of tongues and a kaleidoscope of color resulted from the mingling of Ruthenians, Roumanians, Slovaks, Gipsies, Slovaks and Armenians, each group dressed in the multicolored costumes peculiar to their own nationality.

The salt mines of the Marmaros-Sziget district have been worked for centuries and many Americans who have toured this part of Hungary have visited the deep galleries whose rock-crystal walls glitter as if studded with countless iridescent jewels as they reflect the rays of the electric lights. One of the most interesting mines is that of Ronaszek, which contains a great subterranean salt lake having a depth of nearly 300 feet.

"Hunting for bear and lynx on the wooded slo, of the Carpathians in the vicinity of Marmaros-Sziget is a favorite pastime of the Hungarians. The accommodations for sportsmen are not as satisfactory here as in the high Tatras mountains, however."

Ireland's Golden Age.

There need be no "theory" as to the early culture of Ireland. It is a fact, for example, that the Abbey of Clonmacnoise, near Athlone, was once a centre of learning so renowned that scholars resorted thither from the ends of Europe, and the great Charles Magnus sent it presents. And in the realm of art "The Book of Kells," a Latin copy of the Gospels, executed at that time, had no rival for delicacy of illumination—London Standard.

SEA WAR TO THE LIMIT DECLARED BY THE HUNS

U-Boats Will Sink all in the New War Zone—Around the Harbors of Britain and France.

A New York report: Great Britain issued tonight to the torpedo boats stationed at Quiberon to preserve neutrality, not to permit any vessel, either neutral or flying the flag of one of the belligerents, to pass out tonight.

The order applied not only to steamships, but to submarines. Several vessels which passed Quiberon early in the evening before the return to sea were compelled to return to port. The purpose of the order was not disclosed.

Washington report: Germany has declared unrestricted submarine warfare, and has announced that it will sink all ships, neutral or enemy, within a prescribed zone, will be endangered.

A starvation blockade of England was announced to the American Ambassador in Berlin and to the State Department here by Count von Bernstorff.

Thus begins the long-foretold campaign of ruthlessness by the Kaiser's von Hindenburg. It is said, here, on a magnitude never even contemplated by von Tirpitz.

A sea cordon, running from the Dutch Terschelling Lightship, off the Dutch coast in the North Sea, to Norway, thence west into the Atlantic and south along the French coast, and in the Mediterranean, except the western part adjacent to the Spanish coast, down into Greek territorial waters, has been drawn by Germany, and in it neutral Governments have been warned their ships will ply at their own risk.

Under certain conditions regular American trans-Atlantic passenger steamers may continue their trips to England if Falmouth is made their port of destination and a certain time, which will not be mined, is used by them. Only one steamer may run each week to and from the United States, and the United States Government is asked for guarantees that they carry no contraband.

In a document announcing Germany's purpose to do away immediately "with the restrictions" which null now have been imposed upon the use of her full sea-power, the German Government has announced that the step is taken because of the failure of the Teutonic allies' attempt to bring about peace.

THE SUPER-CRISIS.

Again the United States faces severance of diplomatic relations with Germany with all its eventual possibilities.

Talk of peace in Europe and of means of preserving the peace of the world have gone glimmering. President Wilson, in the first instance, the unofficial text of Germany's warlike was brought to him, at once called for the official document, which had just been presented to Secretary Lansing by the German Ambassador, Mr. Lansing absolutely refused to make a comment.

The President has the task of deciding what shall be the course of the United States. Three immediate steps appear among the possibilities. The United States might solemnly warn Germany against a violation of her pledges; it might be decided that the German warning is sufficient notice of an intention to disregard those pledges and a sufficient reason for the severance of diplomatic relations; it might be decided to wait the results of the blockade and determine the course of the United States as the actual operations develop.

On almost every side Germany's drastic action is interpreted as an open confession of the effectlessness of the British sea blockade. It is regarded as a determination to attempt to strike back in kind.

RENEWAL OF BLOCKADE.

It virtually is a renewal and an extension of the submarine blockade of the British Isles, proclaimed on Feb. 4, 1915, and which became effective Feb. 18, 1915. Under it ships were sunk without warning until Germany abandoned the practice and gave her assurances, in the Sussex case, to abide by international law. The Lusitania was the only one of other ships were sunk under the decree.

Germany, according to information received here, realizes that her action may result in a break of relations, but Berlin officials are prepared for the rupture. Tonight they were represented as feeling that the only other steps open to the United States are the calling of a conference of neutral nations to end the blockade, or the taking of some step which speedily would result in peace.

Information received from the same source is that Admiral von Tirpitz, who followed the submarine warfare, is as still being ready to discuss peace at any time. However, it is declared that German officials, both in this country and in Berlin, feel that the declaration of changed policy should make it clear that Germany is not ready to discuss peace.

Unrestricted submarine warfare, it was declared, was determined upon as soon as the nature of the Entente reply to President Wilson's note became known and before the President's address to Congress.

Two opposing views of American hostility have been allowed to pass the German censor. The first was that the harm the United States could do as an active enemy was no greater than as a neutral supplying munitions and loans to the allies, and that the crippling of allied shipping would be the turning point in the war. This apparently is the view now adopted. The other view, known to have been held by some high officials here, was that Germany might in desperation seek to involve the United States as an active enemy, and that the peace conference would be a generous one.

LOOK FOR UNPRECEDENTED SLAUGHTER.

A revolution is expected to take place in the Entente countries, with the result that the world-war will enter a period of frightfulness unimagined heretofore, with the massing for huge offensives by land, it is announced, of ruthlessness by sea officials look forward to at least a Spring and Summer of unprecedented slaughter.

The German note sweeps away all the issues that have previously loomed so large, as well as the announcement that the war will be decided, how it must be used, whether the ship is chartered, requisitioned, or a private, and replaces them with one clear issue, which cannot be brooked or ignored.

TEXT OF THE NOTE.

Following is the official text of the German note:

Mr. Secretary of State:

Your Excellency was good enough to transmit to the Imperial Government a copy of the message which the President of the United States of America addressed to the Senate on the 22nd instant. The Imperial Government has given it the earnest consideration which the President's statement deserves, inspired as they are by a deep sentiment of responsibility. It is highly gratifying to the Imperial Government to ascertain that the main tendencies of this important statement correspond largely to the desires and principles professed by Germany. The Imperial Government includes self-government and equality of rights for all nations. Germany would be sincerely glad if in recognition of this principle countries like Ireland and India, which do not enjoy the benefits of political independence, should now obtain their freedom. The German people also repudiate all alliances which serve to force the countries into a competition for might and to involve them in a net of selfish intrigues.

GERMANY'S LOFTY IDEALS.

On the other hand, Germany will gladly co-operate in all efforts to prevent future wars. The freedom of the seas being a preliminary condition of the free existence of nations and the peaceful intercourse between them, as well as the open door for the commerce of all nations, has always formed part of the leading principles of Germany's political programme. All the more the Imperial Government regrets that the attitude of her enemies who are so entirely opposed to peace makes it impossible for the world at present to bring about the realization of these lofty ideals. Germany and her allies were ready to enter now into a discussion of peace and had set down in the guarantee of existence, honor and freedom of their peoples. Their aims, as has been expressly stated in the note of December 12, 1916, were not directed towards the destruction or annihilation of their enemies and were according to their conviction perfectly compatible with the rights of the other nations. As to Belgium, for which such warm and cordial sympathy is felt in the United States, the Chancellor had declared only a few weeks previously that its annexation had formed part of Germany's intentions. The peace to be signed with Belgium was to provide for such conditions in that country, with which Germany desires to maintain friendly neighborly relations, that Belgium should not be used again by Germany as a base for the purpose of instigating continuous hostile intrigues. Such precautionary measures are all the more necessary, as Germany's enemies have repeatedly stated, not only in speeches delivered by their leading men, but also in the statute of the Entente Conference in Paris, that it is their intention to treat Germany as an equal, even after peace has been restored, but to continue their hostile attitude and especially to wage a systematic economic war against her.

ALLIES' "LUST OF CONQUEST."

The attempt of the four allied powers to bring about peace has failed owing to the lust of conquest of such enemies, who desired to dictate the conditions of peace. Under the pretence of following the principle of nationality, our enemies have disclosed their real aims, viz., to dismember Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria. To the wish of reconciliation they oppose the wish of destruction. They desire to fight to the bitter end. A new situation has thus been created which forces Germany to new decisions.

Since two years and a half blockade in using her naval power for a criminal purpose to force Germany into submission by starvation, the brutal contempt of international law the group of powers led by England does not only carry out a legitimate trade of their opponents, but they also by ruthless pressure compel neutral every trade accessible to the Entente powers or to limit it according to their arbitrary decrees. The American Government knows the states which have been taken to cause the land and her allies to return to the rules of international law and to respect the freedom of the seas. The English Government, however, insists upon continuing its war of starvation, which does not at all affect the military power of its opponents, but which does, to suffer for their country and privations which endanger the vitality of the nation. Thus British tyranny mercilessly increases the sufferings of the world indifferent to the terrible struggle causes new destruction, new sufferings. Each day shortening the war will, on both sides, preserve the lives of thousands of brave soldiers and be a step to the triumph of the Allies.

SINCE WILL SAIL AN USUAL.

A New York report: Orders were sent and her allies are prepared to meet Germany's moves in her submarine campaign. It was authoritatively asserted in shipping circles here last night, that Entente powers were convinced weeks ago that ruthless warfare with undersea boats would be decreed sooner or later, and have known for ten days that the decision had been reached it was said.

The ports of Liverpool and Bordeaux will be kept open at all hazards. British steamship representatives asserted, even if it becomes necessary to convey every merchant ship which crosses the Atlantic. The first step to be taken by the British Admiralty, which virtually controls the merchant fleet of the Allies, will be to arm every ship with guns fore and aft for defensive purposes, it was predicted.

To meet the emergency which it was confidently expected would arise from the British Government's decision to keep these lanes open, a large fleet of small, fast submarines to be used as "submarine chasers." This type of war craft has proven very effective against undersea boats, well informed shipping men declared.

Agents of British lines declared the Admiralty now has a fleet of 4,000 vessels available to keep these lanes clear of raiders and submarines and to act as convoys.

The Admiralty has so arranged sailings and schedules, it was explained, that they can be changed without delay to meet whatever circumstances may arise. The assertion was made that there will be no interruption in the sailings from American ports of ships flying the flags of the Entente allies.

It was considered probable, however, that vessels flying neutral colors will be kept in port until instructions are received from the Governments. This is certain to be true in the case of Dutch steamships.

A marked advance in marine insurance rates to-morrow was considered tonight to be inevitable. One way rates to-day for American vessels were 7 per cent while there was a ten per cent war risk rate on ships clearing for Mediterranean ports.

FIRST ROUND IS BRITAIN'S

Her Extension of Mine Fields a Big Advantage.

Norway's Ruling Also Hurts the Germans.

London Cable.—A flush fight at sea between Germany and Britain, in which all pretense of carrying on the war according to the practices of civilized nations will be abandoned by the Kaiser's naval forces, is expected here as the inevitable consequence of Germany's latest note to the United Kingdom.

Great Britain, in the opinion of naval men here, has virtually won the first round in the combat before it has been fought, by her promptness in extending the mine fields to a new section of the sea area.

Germany will be restricted further in her submarine warfare of the British coast by the action of the Norwegian Government in closing the waters of that kingdom to German U-boats.

Norway has declared that no German U-boat shall enter this area unless injured or forced there by stress of weather. Under such conditions the undersea craft must run on the surface, displaying the German flag. If she fails to comply with these regulations she will be sunk without warning by the fire of Norwegian naval craft.

While this ruling applies to all belligerents, it will affect Great Britain little or not at all, since her submarines rarely move into those waters.

DIED OF COLD.

Laurentine Fatalities Not Due to Lack of Time.

London Cable.—There was ample time to save all on board the British auxiliary cruiser Laurentine, which was sunk by a mine off the north coast of Ireland last Thursday, says an official statement issued today.

The fatalities were due to severe weather preventing rescue in the boats reaching shore, it adds.

A statement appeared in some of the morning papers, says the official announcement, "to the effect that there was not sufficient time to save all who had escaped being killed by the explosion, and that the ship Laurentine was put into the water with her more than 200 men."

This is wholly incorrect. There was ample time to save everybody, and the ship was very carefully searched above and below, and all hands were put into boats. Those who were lost were lost owing to the cold, and the severity of the weather preventing them from reaching the shore.

The official report on the Laurentine stated that 121 officers and men were saved. She is believed to have had a complement of about 500, the loss of life thus being indicated at about 180.

ALL HOSPITAL SHIPS WARNED

Germany Will Sink Them in Prescribed Zone.

Britain Announces Reprisals Will Follow.

London Cable.—An official announcement says: "The German Government announces that 'they have conclusive proof that in several instances enemy hospital ships often have been misused for the transport of munitions and troops.' They also state that they have placed these proofs, through diplomatic channels, before the British and French Governments," and adds:

"At the same time, it declared that hospital ships passing on the military route of the hostile army engaged in France and Belgium, within the lines of Flanders, to Terschelling, on the one hand, and the Thames, on the other, shall be no more treated as hospital ships in violation of international law."

"From the German Government's statement that hospital ships will be no longer treated as such, it is to be drawn, viz., that it is the intention of the German Government to add yet other and more unspeakable crimes against the law of humanity to the long list which already exists in these circumstances. The British Government has requested the United States Government to inform the German Government that his Majesty's Government has decided that if the threat is carried out, reprisals will immediately be taken by the British authorities concerned."

"The British Government must emphatically deny that British hospital ships have been used for the transport of munitions and troops, or in any way contrary to the Hague Convention for the adaptation of the principles of the Geneva Convention to maritime war."

MAILS BY AIR
AFTER THE WAR

France Already Planning for the Future.

Britain's Plane Fleet Now Leads World.

(By Fred B. Pitney.)

Paris Cable.—The thousands of aeroplanes now in use by the French armies for scouting and bombardment purposes will be converted into "peace doves" as soon as hostilities are over, says a dispatch from Paris, planning routes all over Europe and the colonies.

The decision to utilize the immensely valuable air fleet in time of peace was reached recently by Minister Clementel, at whose instance a commission to consider the subject was formed. The members of this body met for the first time yesterday. They will consider all aspects of the aeroplane industry in its bearing both upon national and international postal relations. According to President D'Aubigny, of the commission, the war has developed the manufacture of air craft to a point where it constitutes almost the entire national economic aspect as railway and shipping enterprises.

If the plans of the commission are realized we may see soon after peace comes a Europe gridironed with aerial mail routes, along which the hundreds of the French and British planes will fly daily on missions far different from their present errands of destruction.

BRITAIN MAY JOIN.

The British aerial forces, according to recent estimates, are vastly in excess of the French. While no exact figures are obtainable, Great Britain probably has at least a short of eight or ten thousand aeroplanes, with fliers, mechanics and constructors numbering perhaps ninety thousand.

The plans of the French commission do not contemplate, at present, the inclusion of the British air fleet, but it is probable that some form of co-operation will be devised by the two countries to put the British aircraft to similar use in peace time. Great Britain, in addition to maintaining her supremacy on the sea, is undoubtedly planning an extension of this supremacy in the air. She would welcome an opportunity to cut down the expense of this tremendous establishment after the war by using it for postal purposes, provided such use did not detract from its value in warfare.

The British planes represent the last word in aerial construction, being superior even to the French. Great Britain has at many types as there are classes of war vessels. She has gone into the construction of aircraft on the same scale as she has constructed her navy. Mechanics have been developed or perfected for this or that special service—fast planes for scouting, quick, responsive craft for combat, "naches" for photography, and heavy types designed as bomb-carriers.

It is probable that the most important part in the new mail service, should Great Britain join with France in establishing these routes over Europe, the dangers of aerial communication have been reduced to the vanishing point by the numerous aeroplanes, fanously guarded by the military authorities of the two countries. Some of the latest types of British and French machines have stabilizers, which right the machines in the air when they fall from a height.

PRESS OF U. S. SAY NATION MUST FIGHT

No Course Open to President but to Break With the Huns.

CANNOT GIVE WAY

And Asquiesce in the New Frightfulness Campaign.

New York Report.—Despatches to the Associated Press from every quarter of the United States to-night reveal a remarkable unanimity of editorial opinion that the country is on the verge of war with Germany. Epitomizing the attitude of the press of the country toward the latest German note, the New York World, a strong supporter of the Wilson Administration, says:

"There can be only one answer of the part of the United States to the new submarine proclamation, and that answer should be 'no'—today. The German Ambassador must receive his passports forthwith and diplomatic relations must cease at once. There should be no procrastination until the hand of the United States Government is forced by premeditated murder and degradation."

"We have made every concession to Germany that self-respect will permit, and all those concessions have proven to be in vain. To acquiesce in a resumption of ruthless submarine operations is to subject ourselves to the losses of war while depriving ourselves of self-defence. That is intolerable. No peace is worth the price of abject national humiliation and degradation. No peace is worth the surrender of a nation's sovereign rights."

"If Germany wants war with the United States, let Germany have war with the United States. Our hands are clean."

Excerpts from other leading papers follow.

New York Herald: "The major portion of the note published today is for the purpose of humiliating the German people. The American people are interested only in its open flouting of their Government, in the truculent assumption of Prussianism that it can deprive the United States of all those rights which have been maintained so stoutly in the past. Doubtless the idea of the Berlin Government is that it can 'bluff' an American President into a disgraceful surrender. The Berlin Government may be mistaken."

New York Tribune.—We have submitted to outrage long enough. Peace would be purchased by compliance with the Kaiser's latest insulting instructions to us as to how we should conduct our commerce with the Entente nations.

His western European blockade is not a war more legitimate than a war more legitimate than his "war zone" operations in British and Irish waters. And the ferocity underlying this new pretense of conducting a blockade consistent with military law is far more brazenly avowed and gloried in. The United States fought one war in 1812, on behalf of the principle of the freedom of the seas. We cannot believe that it has so far lost its manhood as to hesitate now that the challenge has come which may compel it to fight again."

New York Sun.—The note closes for the present the chapter of altruistic endeavors and tentatives of parley into which President Wilson has written his idealistic hopes. It creates an entirely new situation of the United States is concerned. The serious situation in its possibilities of upward incidents which may put to the test the steadfastness of Washington in its attitude and assertion of the principles which our State Department has already enunciated."

GERMANS AGAIN
IN HOLY WRATH

Amsterdam, Holland, Cable, via London.—Lamar Williams, replying to a telegram received by him from the director of the Prisoners of War, denounces a dispatch from Berlin, sent this morning, which says: "After thirty months of warfare, rich in sacrifices, the entire people, in holy wrath at the rejection of any peace offer, is inspired anew with doubled strength and stands as one man."

Keep in mind the date of Feb. 27th. The grand entertainment given at Wellman's.

Mr. E. Pollock, Miss Alice and Lela Pollock took tea at Mr. J. Stiles, on Monday evening of this week.

A number of young men from here went to Frankford on Sunday to attend to the evangelistic song service at night.

WEST HUNTINGDON

Mr. Henry Atkins of Belleville, spent a few days at Mr. A. B. Farney's, last week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Graham have returned home after spending a few days near Tweed, attending a convention.

Mrs. William Donnan intends holding an auction sale on Tuesday, 13th inst.

Mrs. Mary Sines is ill with pneumonia.

The memorial service of the late Wm. Donnan 1st Sunday was well attended. Rev. C. S. Redick assisted by Rev. J. T. Hall, of Stirling, conducted the service. The pastor chose for his text, John, 13:7: "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." The speaker showed very clearly that no matter how carefully we plan, our plans are not the same as God's and sooner or later they will fail, and as Mr. Donnan was a man much needed in this community and his own home also, so our Saviour was a man so much needed and yet it pleased God to take him away, so the only comfort we can find is in religion and that in our text.

BELL VIEW

The cold weather still keeps up, but the roads are fair, the bear surely saw his shadow on the 2nd inst. for the sun was shining brightly all morning.

The ladies of the Women's Institute in this vicinity are busy quilting a quilt to be sold at the concert to be held at Spring Brook on Friday the 16th inst. We understand this is to be a big affair, being an oyster supper and concert combined and the forces of the W.I. and L.O.L. being combined to make it a huge success. Prominent speakers will be present and the concert will be decidedly a patriotic one, the entire proceeds being given to the Red Cross. We are anxiously awaiting the appearance of the bills.

The third house social in the series of socials given by the W.A. of St. Mark's church will be held at the home of Mrs. J. F. Baker on Tuesday of next week the 13th inst. Mr. Arthur Burkit has kindly thrown his stables open for the use of those driving to this social.

MINTO

The Misses Mabel Jeffrey and Ethel Fagleton, of Sidney, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hagerman last week and are visiting other friends this week.

The deepest sympathy is felt, in the neighborhood, for Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Johnston, who buried their little one-year old and only daughter on Wednesday of last week.

There are very few homes in our neighborhood, which have not been visited by gripe, but we are glad to say that many of those who have had an attack are getting around again.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. MacMaster were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hagerman on Sunday evening last.

There was no service at Salem on Sunday last, on account of quarterly meeting being held at Beulah.

We are glad to say that Mr. Jno. Robinson is somewhat better this week, than he has been for sometime.

SINE

Miss Nellie Wallace is the guest of Mrs. Will Donald.

Mrs. C. M. Sine is visiting relatives in Sidney.

Miss Laura Waller spent last week with friends in Minto.

W. H. Waller, wife and family and Mrs. G. M. Denike and family were the guests of Alex. Green on Thursday of last week.

Robert Maybee and wife were the guests of P. E. Burges on Tuesday.

Mr. Seymour Waller was the guest of his uncle Mr. Daniel Sines on Sunday.

Sorry to report Mr. John Green's are shut in with scarlet fever.

Miss Gladys Seward returned home on Sunday after spending a few weeks the guest of her cousin, Miss Vera Sine.

FRANKFORD

We are pleased to see Mrs. W. Moynes out again after her attack of rheumatism.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Johnston were in Stirling on Tuesday afternoon the guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. Baker.

Mr. and Mrs. Meyers were in Stirling on Tuesday.

Mr. Wm. Gallagher is out assessing again.

A party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Nicholson on Tuesday evening, dancing and other amusements were indulged in till the wee sma' hours of the morning.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Johnston attended the funeral of their nephew at Minto, on Wednesday.

Master Elmer Southard, of Trenton, spent Tuesday and Wednesday with his uncle, Mr. Meyers.

If the old saying is true of the bear seeing his shadow on the 2nd of February, we must be in for 30 days more of the cold weather.

Letter from Pte. G. R. Boulton

St. Martin's Plains, Kent, Eng.

January, 14th, 1917.

My dear parents and all:—

With pleasure I will now endeavor to answer your most welcome letter received this morning, just as I had finished my breakfast and as usual, I was most awfully glad to get a letter from home and mother. But mother I was very, very sorry to hear of our dear grandmother's death, yes indeed, I was very sorry to hear of it and to think that I never had the opportunity of seeing her, makes it all the worse, for it was always my desire to see grandma, before she died, and the girls will tell you the same. Only God and I, knew my feelings when I got your letter, but I will live in hopes of meeting her in Heaven, when it was not possible to see her here on earth. But the Lord doeth all things well.

The postman just handed me the box I have been waiting for so long, from the River Valley W. L. and I certainly am glad to say everything arrived in good condition. The cheese, raisins, candy and cigarettes will furnish a supper for us such as we seldom get here.

I am going to write the Pres. of the W. L. in a short time, and tell her that the parcel arrived in first-class condition. I am always glad to get a letter or box from home.

There are several of us boys together in a hut here and yesterday the boxes began to come and they have been coming right along ever since. We were quarantined 10 days with measles, but I luckily escaped them.

I received a nice letter from Ida and Alfred and one from Ida and Lloyd, also, the box they sent containing a wrist watch, which I needed.

We are having quite nice weather now with not too much rain, but no doubt it will be along again soon. There is nothing new to tell about the war, only that there is heavy fighting at the present time.

Now I must say good-bye for this time and will try to write you every week, if at all possible.

I am as ever, your loving son and brother,

How the Trouble Began.

It was a bright, sunny Tuesday morning and Mrs. Brown was on the roof preparing to hang out her wash, when Mrs. Jones appeared on the scene carrying a basket of clothes.

"What are you doing here?" demanded Mrs. Jones. "Monday is your day for hanging out clothes."

"I know it is," replied Mrs. Brown, removing the clothespins from her mouth so she could articulate more clearly, "but it rained yesterday, and I'm hanging 'em out today instead. Tuesday belongs to the fourth floor back, and that's vacant, so I guess I've got as good a right here as anybody else. What is it to you, anyhow? Wednesday is your day."

"Wednesday is my day, all right," admitted Mrs. Jones. "but the paper says it's going to rain tomorrow, and I ain't takin' any chances. You take them rags of yours downstairs again, or I'll throw 'em off the roof!" And that's how the trouble began.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Boost For Barley.

"Barley is strangely neglected by the cook of today," says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion. "As it contains more starch and sugar and less gluten than wheat, it might well take the place of the potato on our tables and this with benefit to purse and health."

"One cup of barley will swell to five times its original size when cooked, and its uses are wonderfully varied."

"As a breakfast dish with sugar and cream it is rich and satisfying; for dinner, as a garnish for meat or with rich meat gravy, it makes a savory entree; at tea time cold steamed barley cut in slices and browned in hot butter, then served with maple syrup, is delicious."

"Combined with dried or fresh fruits it makes as wholesome desserts as rice. Indeed, there is no way in which rice may be prepared in which barley cannot be cooked with just as good results. Barley requires a long time to cook properly, but now we have the cereal cooker and the fireless cooker and with them the opportunity to have the perfect cereal."

Pa's Revenge.

"Isn't it funny?" said Gladys curiously to her chum, Phyllis. "Father has promised to give me a pair of diamond earrings if I will stop having music lessons. I wonder why?" "That's strange!" agreed Phyllis. "But you've never worn earrings, have you?" "No, I shall have to get my ears pierced." "That explains it," said Phyllis, an innocent smile curving her ruby lips. "He wants to pay you back in your own coin."

Spectacular Toast.

Some men fear breakfast, but bow to custom. It was said of Charles Sala, brother of "G. A. S.", that he "could never eat any breakfast, but for the sake of appearances he put a friend, an artist in oils, to paint on a plate the likeness of a round of toast, which was brought up to him every morning with his tea."—London Mirror.

Tipping as the Last Resort.

A protest is being made against the exaction of "tips" by the servants in public schools. There are few of us capable of regarding "tipping" as philosophically as Lord William Russell, who, on his way to the scaffold, asked the minister in attendance what tip he ought to give the executioner.—London Standard.

Economy the Watchword

The Dominion Government has announced a policy of economy while the war lasts. No new public works are to be undertaken. All the resources of the country are to be devoted to the prosecution of the war.

The wounded and disabled soldiers who have returned from the front will be cared for. The sum of nine million dollars has been set aside to pay pensions for the current year. The war will impose a heavy burden upon the country for years to come, but any provision made for the heroic veterans will meet with the hearty approval of those who have profited by their sacrifices.

Canada's war expenditure for January totalled $24,074,932, exclusive of what Great Britain spent on Canadian troops at the front for food, ammunition, etc.

A. M. CHAPMAN PASSED AWAY

Hastings County Clerk and Vice-President of Ontario Municipal Association Succumbed

Mr. Arthur M. Chapman, clerk of the County of Hastings for the past eight years and clerk of the township of Sidney, passed away on Monday, at his home, 176 Charles St., Belleville. He had been in poor health for some time. Mr. Chapman was Vice-President of the Ontario Municipal Association. He was 46 years of age.

The death of Arthur M. Chapman removes from the sphere of activity one of the leading municipal men of the province. His knowledge of municipal law was so accurate that his opinions were sought even by legal men, while again and again he read papers at provincial gatherings of municipal representatives.

The late Arthur M. Chapman was born at Frankford July 19, 1870, the son of the late John Chapman, who for forty years held the postmastership of Frankford, and of the late Charlotte Matilda Ketcheson of Sidney. He started early in life at rail-roading and his career thenceforth was crowded with ceaseless activity. When the Central Ontario railway was building, he became the first station agent in Frankford and held that position for twenty-two years, adding thereto other duties. He became local manager of the Bell Telephone Company and only gave up this post at the time of his illness. He acted as soliciting freight and passenger agent for the C. O. R. now the C. N. R. and was C. P. R. telegraph agent.

In 1904 he became clerk of the township of Sidney, succeeding the late F. B. Prior. Four years later he succeeded the late W. R. Aylsworth as clerk of the County of Hastings, his appointment being made at the June session. Later the council appointed him High County Constable. He was organizer of rural lines of the Sevmour Power Company until the Hydro-Electric Commission took over the system.

Evidence of the people's confidence in his knowledge of municipal law is borne in the numerous disputes in which he was called in as arbitrator between the railways and individuals.

Mr. Chapman possessed the rare power of magnetism. His ability in training men was manifested while he held his Frankford position. The success of his career was due to the conviction that his course was the right one and to making the best of every opportunity.

Deceased was an ardent temperance advocate and lent himself freely regardless of the energy required, to the cause of prohibition. His work in the local option campaign was of great strength to the workers. He was a Methodist and during his eight years' residence in Belleville had been an active worker in Bridge St. Methodist church. The same leadership he manifested in municipal affairs he showed in church work. One of his fortes was as a leader in song.

He was treasurer of the Missionary Society at Bridge Street and was a member of the choir. His services he always gave where most needed in the cause of humanity.

When war broke out, he with others toured Hastings and Prince Edward and by his gift of song stirred the communities to patriotic and Red Cross endeavor.

He was a charter member of Frankford Lodge, I. O. O. F., and belonged to several other benevolent societies. He was a conservative in politics.

The late Mr. Chapman was married in very early life to Miss Mary Simmons of Frankford, who survives with three children: Earl E., Marion G. and John M. Deceased's step-mother and two step-sisters, Mrs. Donald Bleeker, of Trenton and Mrs. Everett Moyes, of Frankford, also survive.

Two brothers of the late A. M. Chapman died not long ago—John Franklin Chapman, who was general manager of the Thousand Island and Oshawa railway companies, and Earl Russell Chapman, freight appraiser of the G.T.P., at Edmonton, Alta.

His loss will be distinctively felt in this community and throughout the district.

The funeral was held on Wednesday afternoon, service being held in Bridge Street Methodist church, at 2:30 and was largely attended which showed the high esteem in which deceased was held.

Lottie L. Tiltotson has been Deported

It is Alleged that she Served Time in Jail and has a very bad Record

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Feb. 12th.—Lottie Tiltotson, alias Mary McLean alias Melba Costello, who has during the past two years lectured in every town and hamlet in Ontario, advertising herself as a native of Hawaii, was arrested here today by Travelling Immigration Inspector Reynolds, of Ottawa, for breach of the Canadian Immigration laws. The movements of the woman were regarded with considerable suspicion by the Dominion police authorities for some months past. She appeared before Police Magistrate Ellis this afternoon, pleaded guilty and was fined $50 and costs or three months in goal. After paying the fine Lottie was deported to the United States.

On September 4th, 1913, under the name of Mary McLean, the Tiltotson woman was sentenced to six months for shoplifting. In the same year at Hamilton, as Melba Costello, she was given suspended sentence for the same offence. Owing to the unlooked for action of the immigration officers, the much advertised lecture of Miss Tiltotson in one of the leading churches to-night was necessarily called off.

Lottie lectured in Belleville a couple of years ago and at various other points in the district. At Bancroft she was arrested for having jumped a board bill at Gilmore. She promptly settled the claim, but apparently has not reformed.

Miss Tiltotson lectured in Stirling some time ago, and proved a great frost.

More Socks Needed for Soldiers

Only 24,000 pairs of socks for soldiers were shipped from Canada during January, and as the stock in England is rapidly being depleted Canadian women are asked by the Canadian War Contingent Association in Canada to endeavor to replenish the supply. Supplies may be sent to any of the local receiving centres of the C. W. C. A. or may be forwarded to 77 King Street east, Toronto, clearly marked "Soldiers' Comforts." Cheques for the provision of comforts for the men should be forwarded to Mrs. John Bruce at the same address.

"FIND MY HAND THERE"

Returned Soldier's Offer of Seat Spurned

Just because a man wears civilian clothing is not sufficient reason to take it for granted that he is a shirker or is medically fit to be wearing the King's uniform. A minister's daughter, disdaining to have anything to do with a creature still in multi, learned this to her regret when she entered an Avenue road car.

The car was, as usual, crowded. A young man rose and offered his seat to the young lady who entered.

"No," she said, with a toss of her head and a scornful look at the young man. "I wouldn't accept a seat from a civilian."

For a moment the young man was embarrassed.

"Have you any relatives at the front?" he queried.

"Yes, I have two brothers there," she replied.

"Well, the next time you write ask them if they can find my hand over there," he said quietly, as he showed his arm minus the hand.

This time it was the lady who was embarrassed. The passengers hissed and the lady made her exit.—Toronto Evening Telegram

Mary's Lamb

Mary had a little hen,
Its tints were speckled grey.
And every where that Mary went
That hen was sure to lay.

It followed her to school one day;
The principal was nice;
To raise the mortgage on his home
That hen did lay the price.

When Mary went to buy a hat
The hen was at the door,
And when it cackled, malice cried:
"An egg, here, take my store."

It followed Mary to the bank.
It wasn't Mary's fault
When clerks by force obtained the egg
And locked it in the vault.

Poor Mary wished to take a trip;
She didn't have the fare;
But Biddy huddled on her nest
As if she didn't care.

Then Mary sighed, "I cannot go.
The distance is too far!"
But Biddy cackled sweet and low
And Mary bought a car.

And Mary bought a thousand things;
Her growing wealth she loosed,
To bring her joy—and for the hen
She built a marble roost.

And suiters came from far and near;
On Mary they did fawn.
She spurned them all—for she was wise;
Her wealth had EGGED them on.

FRUIT MEN'S CONVENTION IN TORONTO

Some Criticism of the Inspection and Sale Act is Heard.

THE DUST SPRAY

Advocated as Being Better Than Liquid in Orchards.

Toronto despatch. That the inspection and sale act gives no protection whatever to the apple grower who buys apples in small quantities from retail stores was one of the statements made by Mr. A. S. Chapin made yesterday at the annual convention of the Fruit Growers' Association of Ontario. That it does not always protect the grower who buys even in barrel lots was another assertion made by Mr. Chapin.

Donalson Fruit Commissioner John Donalson stated that the inspection and sale act does not define the quality of fruit sold in open packages; the purchaser is supposed to see and judge for himself in such cases. The act does, however, provide that the contents must conform to the top layer in quality. Mr. John Donalson admitted that in the case of open packages there may be some packing but such cases were rare. On the other hand, apples imported last year from Maine, where there is no legal standard for grading, were in all cases every case, found to be unsatisfactory over-ripe and Canadian dealers who imported these were compelled to regrade before offering for sale.

Mr. Chapin also complained of the law in another particular. The standard fixed for No. 2 grade, he said, was so indefinite that even he, with fifteen years' experience, could not say what a No. 2 grade was. He would have two classes of No. 1—No. 1 large and No. 1 small. In both cases the apples should be free of spot, well shaped and well colored. By using two sizes the fruit would sell better than if mixed. In No. 2 he would put fruit lacking in color and slightly spotted. The sale of culls, save for evaporator or canning stock, he would prohibit altogether.

The President, Dr. Grant, in his address, said there never was and never would be any more of the production of low-grade fruit. "Put the high-class fruit on the market and send the rest of it to the evaporators and canning factories, or feed it to the hogs," he said.

Prof. J. W. Crow expressed the opinion that there never was a time when there was more money in the return from the planting of orchards by men who are prepared to care for the same than there is now. He favored, however, the setting out of large orchards by skilled orchardists, not a lot of small plantations by men who will not care for them.

Experienced fruit growers told of the varieties which had proven most profitable. Mr. F. B. Lovekin, who has 5,000 apple trees on his farm, said the Baldwin had paid off more mortgages on the Lake Ontario front than any other variety. If he were setting out a new plantation he would not half in Solov and we DeWess, Waxmors and Dwarf pears as fillers to produce fruit before the Spies came in bearing.

Mr. H. T. Foster, Burlington, named the Ribston Prolific, Blenheim, Sov. Baldwin and Greening in one class.

FALL PLOWING OF ORCHARDS.

There was some diversity of opinion as to fall plowing of orchards. Messrs. W. F. Kydd and A. W. Pearl favored plowing and harrowing after the season's growth over. The mulch so left is, they said, as efficient protection against winter root killing of trees as a cover crop. By plowing under the cover crop there are, too, fewer nesting places left for mice, and so much less work is left to do in spring.

Mr. George Robertson of Niagara district, said that fall plowing would not do in his case, as it was necessary to leave a full growth to hold the snow for winter protection. But Mr. W. H. Bunting, also of the Niagara district, declared he had tried all methods and had experienced no unusual winter injury after fall plowing.

DUST SPRAY IN ORCHARDS.

A discussion on dust vs. liquid spray for control of scale and codling moth in apple orchards was opened by Prof. H. H. Whetzel, Plant Pathologist of Cornell University. From 1912 to 1916, inclusive, Cornell station carried on comparative experiments with dust and liquid sprays. In these four years the dust method in experimental work, gave as good results as liquid spray, and at no greater cost. In 1916 eleven apple groves in New York State tried the new method in commercial orchards. Some of these groves had been using dusting than by spraying. On the average the eleven orchards showed 17 per cent. more scale with dust than with liquid spray. What was noteworthy was that at Cornell station itself, despite the unfavorable weather conditions, better results were obtained with dust than with liquid spray.

Prof. Whetzel did not believe that the cost of dust would be less than liquid spray, and one great advantage in favor of the former is that it can be applied much more quickly. Ten acres could be "dusted" in two hours, while it would require two days to apply liquid effectively to the same area.

"In my opinion dusting has come to stay," concluded Prof. Whetzel. "The day will come, I believe, when every fruit-grower in Canada and the United States will use the dust method."

St. Catharines, O. A. C. said he had secured 97 per cent. of clean fruit with dusting in the Niagara district last year, but weather conditions were much more favorable there than in the average of Ontario. Mr. Kidd, on the other hand, under average Ontario conditions, did not get nearly as good results as with liquid. In a normal season Prof. Cannon had no doubt of the efficiency of dusting.

DAY'S TOLL OF GERMAN SUBS.

Ten Ships Were Sunk, Six of Them British.

Brutality Clearly Proved by Survivors.

London Cable. Allied and neutral ships aggregating 21,500 tons have been sunk by German submarines during the past 24 hours. Ten vessels in all were sent to the bottom during this period, six of them British. An aggregate tonnage of steamers of an aggregate tonnage of 21,500 tons was sunk. A Norwegian ship and a Swedish steamer, a French trawler and a Russian ship were the other victims of U-boats.

The following are the ships reported sunk: the German steamer, the Saxonia, the Voda-Mort, the Boyne Castle, the Turino, the Launceston, the French steamer Yvonne, the Swedish steamer Varin, and the Russian schooner Ranzpuitis. The captain of the Ranzpuitis has been landed; the crew were left in boats.

Six men of the crew of 23 from the Dauntless have landed. Two of them have died, and the other four are in a hospital. The captain was seriously wounded. An American negro fireman on the Turino, George Washington, was killed.

According to detailed reports of survivors of the British steamer Evestone received at the American Embassy, the German submarine which sank the steamer by shell fire was close to the steamer when it fired three times on one open boat containing members of the crew, an action which, it is asserted, could not have been an accident or a mistake.

The reports say the submarine opened fire when 3,000 yards distant from the Evestone, finding the range easily and using from 18 to 20 shells from the 12-pound and 6-pound guns. After the steamer's two boats, with the crew on board, had dropped astern of the Evestone about a quarter of a ship's length, the submarine fired three times, the shrapnel bursting over the boats, killing the captain and four men of the crew, including Richard Wallace, an American.

Statements by survivors of vessels recently sunk show that in one case a submarine captain in the war zone employed a steamer which it had seized as a place of temporary refuge for crews of other vessels attacked and sunk.

The survivors who told of this procedure were from the Norwegian sailing vessel Songely and the Russian liner Turino. The captain and 23 men of the crew of the latter were landed. Five men of the crew were killed. The crews of both vessels, the survivors relate, were on board an unnamed Italian steamer for two days. The German submarine operating here was named and provided with a crew of six men, as a ship to stand by and receive the crews of sunken ships.

After the crews of the Songely and Turino had been on board the Italian for two days, they were transferred to the British steamer Pomona, which was ordered to take them to port. The Germans also transferred from the submarine to the Pomona Captain Smalles, of the steamer Iolli-side, who had been taken on board the submarine as a prisoner when his vessel was sunk. His crew of 23 were left in open boats, he reported, and are still missing.

The intention of the submarine was to sink the Italian vessel before returning to Germany, according to survivors.

The sinking of the Turino and Iolli-side has already been reported. The Norwegian ship Songely of 2,555 tons gross had not been previously announced as sunk. She was last reported at Buenos Ayres on Nov. 18.

ANOTHER GOOD BRITISH GAIN; SALLY-SAILLISEL HILL TAKEN

Capture of Grandcourt Followed Up Vigorously on Ancre River

All Objects Obtained--Huns Attack on Belgians Badly Repulsed

London Cable. The British in the Somme region of France are keeping up their new offensive against the Germans in their efforts to pass forward toward Bapaume, South-east of Bapaume, along the Bapaume-Peronne road, they have taken the highest point of Sally-Sailisel Hill and captured a large number of Germans and one machine gun. Along with the capture of Ancre, the west of Bapaume, further progress has been made, including the capture of a trench near Grandcourt, where a goodly gain was made Wednesday.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

The official report from headquarters reads: "We attacked this morning an important enemy position on the highest point of Sally-Sailisel Hill on the Somme front. We gained the whole of our objectives and captured a machine gun and 78 prisoners, including two officers."

"On capture of Grandcourt we have been followed up vigorously on both banks of the Ancre, and considerable progress has been made. During the night we attacked and captured Baillescourt farm on the Beaumont-Mirambert road, and south of the Ancre carried another trench from the front between Grandcourt and our old front line. In these operations we have taken a further 82 prisoners, including one officer."

"The ground we have gained on the Ancre since the new year has represented an advance of an average depth of nearly three-quarters of a mile on a front of over three miles."

"We also entered enemy trenches last night south of Bouchavesnes and brought back prisoners and a machine gun. A number of the enemy were killed and dugouts were bombed."

"During the night an enemy raiding party in the neighborhood of Gueudecourt was driven off by our barbed wire before reaching our line. Another enemy raid attempted south-west of La Bassée, also was repulsed."

NOT ALARMED BY CAMPAIGN OF HUN SUBS.

British Admiralty Has Taken Measures, and Will Frustrate U-Boats.

THE BRUTAL FOE

Castigated by Leaders of Civilization in British Parliament.

London Cable. "We are not alarmed at the sharpened submarine war. We knew it was coming and prepared for it. Time will tell how our confidence is justified." This statement was made to the Associated Press today at the Admiralty, and it was added:

"It must be remembered that one submarine may cruise whole days without getting a victim. For instance, on one day since 1913, 100 torpedoes were fired on sight at seven of our merchantmen without getting a single hit. We have taken measures which we have every reason to believe will frustrate the U-boat warfare. Of course, it is obvious that we cannot reveal them—the daily reports of the decrease in sinkings will be the best evidence of our success."

Former Premier Asquith described Germany's new naval policy as one of "undisguised savagery." He said it was not worth while discussing the motives which actuated the German Government. The novel feature of it was that it was a direct and defiant challenge to the conscience and to the interests of the entire neutral world.

"This declaration of war on neutrality," continued Mr. Asquith, "is a challenge which has been taken up with dignity and without delay by the greatest of neutral states. It is not for us to forecast the hearing of this memorable event upon the future of the war. Still less is it fitting for us to tender advice or suggestions to a Government which is well able to take care of itself."

"We shall hail with acclamation, with a strain of family pride, the stern and resolute determination of the other great English-speaking power to frustrate the enormity of those who have abundantly earned for themselves the title of enemies of the human race."

Andrew Bonar Law, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, expressed satisfaction with what he alluded to as the perfect manner in which former Premier Asquith had voiced the feeling of the country in the role of the neutrals in the case of the submarine menace.

Noting that more and more merchant ships were coming under the "Considerable artillery activity on both sides continued in the neighborhood of Arras and the Ypres. We caused a large explosion in the enemy's lines."

The night of February 4-7 we dropped bombs on an enemy aerodrome with good effect. One German aeroplane was destroyed yesterday in the air fighting and three others were driven down damaged. One of our machines is missing."

The German War Office issued a supplementary report tonight admitting that a spirited bombardment was in progress in the Somme sector today. In the Somme sector there was temporarily strong firing. Near Sally-Sailisel naval engagements are in progress."

ATTEMPT TO ENTER BELGIAN LINES.

"Last night the Germans attempted to enter the Belgian lines. A strong enemy party advanced and attacked the Belgian post south of Dixmude, but was repulsed by infantry and machine gun fire. Our results were decimated," the official report says. "The survivors retiring. We took about a dozen prisoners also. Numerous dead were left on the field before the trenches, one of whom was an officer."

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris Cable. The official communication issued by the War Office Thursday night reads: "Spirited artillery fighting took place south of the Somme in the regions of Denicourt and Lihons."

"In the Argonne, in the sector of Boland, we carried out against the German trenches a surprise attack which enabled us to bring back about twenty prisoners. Nothing of importance occurred on the rest of the front."

"Enemy aeroplanes dropped projectiles in the region of St. Vincent bridge. Four civilians were killed and five wounded."

direct requisition of the Government, and that the Shipping Controller was putting down a large number of new ships. Mr. Bonar Law said he did not minimize the submarine danger, but that some of the best brains in the country at large and among naval men were concentrated upon the problem. Altogether, he declared, he was not without hope, whatever the ravages of submarines might be, that something might be done to replace the lost tonnage by new ships.

In the House of Lords the Marquis of Creva, reviewing the situation much as Andrew Bonar Law had done in the House of Commons, said that Germany had thrown aside the mask of humanity by her latest utterance, and had promised a warfare of unequalled savagery which was staggering, not in the sense its authors hoped, but to those who contemplated Germany's moral position.

The speaker said he knew of no parallel in modern history for Germany's act. Even Napoleon and Frederick II. he said, unscrupulous as they were, would have shrunk from such a threat. The action of the United States Government in the face of the German menace, he added, would be founded on a high moral basis. He hoped, however, that nobody would suppose that the action of the United States would make it less imminent upon the allies to do the utmost possible to win the war.

GIVE HEED TO SEED STOCKS

Prof. Zavitz Advises Ont. Fairs Association.

Officers Elected at the Closing Session.

Toronto despatch. Speaking before the Ontario Fairs Association at the closing session held yesterday afternoon in the Foresters' Hall, College street, Prof. C. A. Zavitz, of Guelph, spoke of the importance of seed stocks which had resulted from the competition for high standards of field crops amongst contestants at the Fall fairs. Prof. Zavitz declared that within the last ten years the influence of the association had extended to practically every farming community within the province and he pointed to the great benefits which must accrue to Ontario, particularly, and the entire Dominion in a general way from the improvement of agricultural methods which had been inspired by the competitive features and instructional factors provided by the annual fairs and exhibitions.

Prof. Zavitz insisted that the production of good seed within the province for use in Ontario must be regarded as the very foundation of the work of the association and declared that every effort should be made to extend the scope of the association's usefulness in the direction of this important feature of agricultural development.

amount. "The association," said Prof. Zavitz, "must work for the reduction of the numbers of varieties of farm crops grown in the province to a comparatively few of the very best kinds. Information regarding the amount of seed which each competitor must furnish must be made more readily accessible and the association should devise and practice a system whereby the farming public is informed as to the exact degree of freedom which prevails in the fields of such competitors in farm crop classes, who may offer seed for sale. Finally, this information must be ready for presentation in time for farmers to buy and sell seed as early in the winter as is possible."

After amplifying his statements as to the best improvement of seed stocks, Prof. Zavitz expressed an opinion that the practice of buying seeds from irresponsible agents who peddle from home to home, should be rigorously opposed by the association.

ATTENDANCE AT FAIRS.

Mr. A. R. G. Smith instructed the delegates as to ways and means for stimulating a greater interest in the fall fairs and exhibitions and suggested methods which in his opinion would result in largely increased attendances. He would have complimentary tickets issued to all children who may come in care of parents or elders and have potpourri prominently displayed in all local newspapers announcing the dates and purposes of each gathering called by the association. He spoke of the success which had followed the issuance of many thousands of invitation cards which had been printed for the purpose of calling attention to the benefits which may be derived by all members of the farming communities from a visit to the displays and entry to the competitions.

The following officers were elected to care for the executive business of the association for the ensuing year: President, Wm. Scarf, Durham; first vice-president, L. J. G. Bull, Brampton; second vice-president, W. J. Connelly, Cobden; secretary, J. Lockie Wilson, Toronto; treasurer, Alex. McFarlane, Ottawa; auditor, R. Agnew, Toronto. District directors—J. C. Sturges, Osgoode Station; J. S. Sibbit, Kingston; W. J. Barber, Rossmore; E. H. Purdy, Port Perry; B. Henry, Orangeville; J. E. Pearl, Hamilton; R. E. Cowan, Galt; S. J. Monteth, Stratford; F. W. Johnston, Walkerville; John McDonald, Lucknow; W. J. Milford, Raymond; E. F. Stephenson, New Market and Wm. Marshall, Sault Ste. Marie.

BERNSTORFF GETS PERMIT

Britain Gives Hun Envoy to U. S. Passage

But Cannot Guarantee Against U-Boats.

London Cable. Count von Bernstorff, the former German Ambassador to the United States, will be given a safe conduct so far as it is within the power of the British Government to do so. This announcement was made to-night by the Foreign Office. It followed a conference between A. J. Balfour, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and Ambassador Page.

The American Ambassador called on Mr. Balfour, and the two were closeted for nearly an hour. Both were non-committal on the subject of the deliberations, but it is believed they related solely to the request of the United States Government for the safe conduct of Ambassador von Bernstorff, for at the conclusion of the conference the Foreign Office authorized the announcement of Great Britain's decision to accede to Washington's request, which was made on the day ago.

It is said that Great Britain is ready to grant Count von Bernstorff safe conduct, but that it could not guarantee the former Ambassador's safety against the action of his own subjects. The British Government has expressed itself as anxious to meet the State Department's wishes, and declared that it would do all in its power to carry them out.

James W. Gerard, the American Ambassador to Germany, is still in Berlin. A semi-official communication says the date of his departure "has not yet been fixed." There has been no denial by Berlin of the official announcement in Copenhagen that the German ship which could be allowed to leave Berlin until the German Government was satisfied as to the treatment by the American Government of Count von Bernstorff, the retiring German Ambassador at Washington in 1913, words, Gerard is being held as a hostage.

LEAVING GERMANY.

U. S. Citizens Crowd Embassy for Assistance.

Berlin Cable, via London, Cable. The scene at the United States Embassy this morning recalled the memorable days of August, 1914. Crowds of anxious Americans blocked the corridors and secretarial rooms, seeking the German Government to return in regard to possible routes back home. Several secretaries and attaches of the Embassy were stationed in the corridors to answer questions, and the passport department worked at full speed extending and renewing passports without referring to the latter prescribed reference to Washington.

Plans for the departure of Ambassador Gerard and his staff are still unsettled. It will perhaps be a matter of several days before they will leave Germany. The Ambassador will return directly to the United States.

41 DIED IN SINKING OF CALIFORNIA

Big Vessel Sank in Nine Minutes After Torpedo Hit Her.

WAS NO PANIC

Conduct of Passengers and Crew Was the Best, Captain Says.

London Cable. Forty-one persons perished when the British passenger liner California, of the Anchor Line, was torpedoed and sank off the Irish coast at 8 o'clock Wednesday morning. The vessel sank in nine minutes. The stricken ship was able to send out "S. O. S." calls, and help arrived promptly. Nevertheless, five persons were killed by the explosion and 35 were drowned in the launching of the lifeboats.

The California was an armed liner, carrying a single 4.7 gun mounted on the stern. The gunner was just training the weapon on the spot where oil bubbles had revealed the presence of the under-water enemy when a torpedo struck the port side with a tremendous explosion so violent that most of the people aboard were thrown off their feet, five being killed and a score injured.

The submarine fired a second torpedo, in an apparent effort to accelerate the sinking, but the second shot missed, although both torpedoes were fired from a distance of less than 300 yards.

There was only one American aboard the California, and he is among the survivors.

LOWERED FROM SLOPING DECKS.

Captain Henderson, commander of the California, declares that the conduct of the passengers and crew was exemplary. There had been careful drills on the ship on the way across, and every person aboard had been assigned to his or her station. But despite the coolness of the passengers and the seamanship of the crew, the successful launching of the boats was made impossible by the shortness of the time between the torpedoing of the vessel and her disappearance beneath the waves, which did not permit waiting until the ship had lost headway.

When the boats were being lowered from the sloping decks the California continued to move forward, lurching like a drunken man, and the roar of guns in the distance, the deafening sound of the explosion and the shouting of the officers and men, in a number of cases it was necessary for the passengers to jump into the boats after they were in the water, and in one case a boat with its apportioned load was swamped and sank. Some of the survivors were seen jumping from their stations into the sea and swim to the boats. It was extremely fortunate that the weather was calm and the sea glassy; otherwise it would probably have been impossible to launch a single boat.

NO WARNING GIVEN.

The townspeople who crowded the quays carried blankets, clothing and food, and were eager to be of some assistance to the survivors when they were brought ashore. Aside from those injured, few of the survivors needed much help, but some were thinly clad and gladly accepted gifts of clothing. Naval and military Red Cross contingents were present to care for the injured, who were removed to hospitals.

According to the reports received by the American Embassy from some of the survivors, there was only one submarine, which, however, fired two torpedoes, one of which missed by a few yards, the other hitting the California squarely on the port quarter. It was the captain from the bridge who discerned suspicious oil bubbles on the surface of the water 300 yards distant. He instantly divined that a submarine was there and ordered the gunner to fire. Before this could be done the ship was torpedoed. The track of the torpedoes and the escape of the submarine could be seen, but no warning was given, and the submarine did not sink to the bottom after the survivors were in the water.

Captain Henderson and the other officers remained aboard the California until the ship went down. Among the officers missing are Chief Engineer Smith, Engineer Cunningham and Third Officer Simpson.

THE SURVIVORS.

Following are the names of the survivors among the passengers on the California:

First cabin: James Bragdon.

Second cabin: Mrs. J. W. Alderson, Angus (Gleichen), Mrs. Angus (Gleichen), Cornelia O'Donnell, Miss Rose Martin, Alexander Morton (Martin), Miss A. Cuthill (Mrs. M. Chalmers).

Third cabin: Margaret Little, Mary Little and Baby Little, Mrs. Annie McKinley, Alexander Knox (Alfred), James Anderson, Alexander Logan, Marjorie Sinclair, Jessie Robertson.

Letter from Pte. A. S. Hagerman

(Pte. Arthur S. Hagerman asked his mother to thank the Red Cross in his behalf for his Xmas parcel, so thought she would have his letter printed as that way of thanking friends of the Red Cross.)

17. 1. 1917

My Dear Mother:—

Just a line this morning to say I am in pink of condition and hope it may find you all the same. Just received your Xmas parcel yesterday. Many thanks. It has been a long time locating me, but was in fairly good condition. Also got a parcel from Mrs. Fred Blackburn and one from the Red Cross. Will you kindly thank both of them in my behalf, as I have so much writing, but I certainly appreciate all home parcels. Haven't got John B's parcel as yet, but perhaps will soon. Must say I got four parcels altogether last night, so I will be well stocked with sweets and eatables for awhile. Only one parcel reached me in time for Xmas.

Got a letter dated December 9th, also one Dec. 16th from you and expect more soon, as I am anxious to know how you spent your Xmas. Hope ere another year passes things will be settled.

I have been on guard all night and am writing this in the guard-room feeling a bit sleepy. Just back after five days leave as you will know if you received the card I sent you from Chesterfield. I had a fine time of course, it wouldn't be my fault if I didn't.

I haven't seen Fred for quite a few days but guess he is well. Yes, I received your photos alright and sent Florence one of myself the other day.

I suppose everything is an enormous price the same as here. The railway fares have raised a half more. Things have certainly changed here in the last 18 months.

You will be having quite a winter by this time. There is not very much snow just here, but lots of it in the northern part as I was as far as Sheffield last week.

Must close mother for this time as I have father, Florence and Frank to write to yet. Best regards to the neighbors and all inquiring friends, so good-bye with love and lots of kisses,

Your loving son,

ARTHUR.

BELL VIEW

What was no doubt one of the best snowed evenings of the season was spent by the people of Bell View and vicinity, when on Tuesday, Jan. 30th, the W. A. of St. Mark's church held their social at the home of Mrs. A. H. Reid. Mr. and Mrs. Reid were an ideal host and hostess and their popularity as such no doubt contributed largely to the success of the evening. There was a large gathering present and everyone seemed to have a most enjoyable time.

Mr. Ross Eastwood, Roy Brown and Clifford Leury, who are working at Trenton, spent the week end at their homes here. Roy is staying for several days of this week.

Mrs. Jos. Doyle, of Marmora, spent Sunday last at the home of her parents here, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Brown.

Mrs. Jas. Beatty, of Frankford, has been visiting friends in this vicinity and returned home last Tuesday.

Mrs. F. A. Comerfield, of Eldorado, was visiting her father Mr. Jas. McComb on Sunday last.

Miss Stella McComb paid a flying visit home and was here over Sunday. She left Monday morning for Trenton where she has secured a position. Her brother Mr. S. S. McComb also went to Toronto.

SINE

A number of young people had a very enjoyable time at Mr. McVillie Reid's on Tuesday evening.

Sorry to report Miss Ruby Sine on the sick bed.

Rev. Jones, of Foxboro, gave a splendid discourse at Bethel on Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Robt. Taylor, of Bowmanville is spending a few days in the vicinity.

Mrs. C. L. Hogle left the home of her brother, Mr. Silas Green. Sorry to report that their mother is not improving very rapidly.

Glad to report that Mr. Karl Sine, who has been ill for some time is improving nicely.

Miss Laura Waller has an attack of influenza.

It is reported here that in the event of the U. S. going to war with Germany a regiment of Canadians now living in the U. S. will be organized. This, it is said, could easily be accomplished, and would be a return compliment to Americans who have enlisted in the Canadian forces for overseas service.

A hundred things happen every week that a newspaper man never sees. He does the best he can, keeps his eyes and his ears open, but he is only a human being, neither omniscient nor omnipresent. You often wonder why this thing was not published, and maybe you say the newspaper has its favorites, and they have. They are people who are thoughtful enough to send what news they have to the newspaper office or invite the reporter to come where the news is.

Bancroft had a hot fire on Monday night and as a result of the blaze the following business places were consumed: M. Goodkey's pool-room and barber shop; Cameron's grocery store; Russell's barber shop and pool-room; Jas. McCaw's butcher shop and the local telephone office. The Yellow Block, in which the three first named businesses were located, was owned by Davy Bros. and partly covered by insurance. The fire is supposed to have started in one of the pool rooms.

St. Agatha, Que., Feb. 7th

Reached here allright but God knows we had some time getting here and I had a sick headache. We left Montreal last night about 4 o'clock and about 6, I was so sick. Just at that time the train jumped track and went down over a steep bank into the rocks below. I hung on like a good fellow but I thought every minute was the last. As good fortune would have it I was not hurt. I had quite a time getting out and it was awful to hear them crying and screaming for help men, women and children. One man and his wife were killed in our car and the rest all had their heads smashed up or broken limbs. I was the only one in our car that was not hurt and in the whole train load of people there were only three that were not hurt. As near as I could learn 7 killed, 45 injured and you can tell what kind of a spill it was when I was the only soldier not hurt. The rest were sent back to Montreal to the General Hospital.

I'm a little nervous this morning. We are not allowed out here, just cut and go and sit in a big room out side with lots of clothing on. It is going to be lonely for me. I stayed in Belleville the night I left and saw the hockey match and left at 12.20. I was not hurt and am just as fine as a fiddle.

Refused Knighthood

"Among those to whom the late New Year honors of knighthood were offered was Mr. John Ross Robertson, Editor of Toronto Evening Telegram, but he declined the honor.

On the same day, it seems, Mr. Robertson declined a senatorship, which the Borden Government offered him, and, in the words of a well known politician, 'It is the first time in the history of Canada that anyone declined a knighthood and a senatorship on the same day.'

'There is no reason to give, beyond that I exercised the same right as the others who have accepted, and I declined—I hope graciously and gracefully,' remarked Mr. Robertson.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"Stop," she said, thoughtfully. "You say I don't understand her. If she is to be my daughter—and make me, Frederic, if it is as you say, that you cannot forget her, or be happy without her—she will be my daughter."

"Mother!"

"Listen to me! If it is to be, then it is necessary that I should understand her. Frederic, she shall come here. I will ask her to come and stay."

His face flushed, then paled again, and he shook his head.

"She will not come while—while I am here."

"You must go away," she said, resolutely.

His face darkened with a look of disappointment.

"Why should I go away?" he said.

"What good will that do? I shall go and leave her to—she will not finish, but she understood him."

"If there is any one else," she said, "and I know whom you fear—that adventurer who is haunting the place—he will not have any opportunity of seeing her while she is here, and she shall stay and get accustomed to me and the Park. She will learn to value all that she has so foolishly refused, and grow to regret and wish that she had not done so."

His face brightened. Like all men of his type, he was sanguine, and ready to be hopeful.

"I see," he said. "If she would but come!"

Lady Blyte smiled scornfully.

"Do you think that her father will allow her to decline an invitation to the Park? She will come, be sure of that! I will go and ask her to-morrow. You must start by the first train, so that I can say that you have gone. She shall stay a week and then—ah, then we shall see whether she will refuse to be the mistress of the Park!"

Sir Frederic laid his hand on her shoulder gratefully.

"Mother, I know how much this costs you," he said, in a low voice. "I am very grateful for your goodness to me. Yes, I will take your advice. I will go to-morrow by the first train to London, anywhere, and she will come here, with a sigh as he thought of the delight it would afford him to be near her."

"Leave it to me," she said, steadfastly, but sadly; dominated of her was great. "Leave it to me, my dear. I have always gained for you the desire of your heart, and I will succeed in this though—though I hate her!" and her eyes flashed as she looked up at him.

"Don't say that, mother," he said, wincing. "You won't say that when you know her. No one could hate—no one could help loving her. Let me go now, I am worn out," and he stooped and kissed her, and left the room.

Lady Blyte rang the bell.

"Tell Lovel to pack his master's portmanteau," she said to the butler.

"Sir Frederic is going to town by the first train."

Hector Warren, having no carriage, walked home from necessity rather than desire. The cottage in which he lived was situated in a lane leading to looking envelope stuck upon the mantel-shelf, and his expression underwent a complete change. Settling down the candle, he sank into a chair, and gazed heavily, his eyes fixed upon the envelope stuck upon the mantel-shelf as if it were a familiar demon.

He sat there for full five minutes, then he rose and reluctantly, slowly, reached for the letter, and opened it.

As a man who reads unwearyingly, he read the letter through, then with a sigh he tore it into fragments and threw it into the grate, and began pacing the room.

"Too late!" he murmured. "Too late! I cannot throw aside this life as mine. Not link her to such a life as mine! And yet—oh, my darling—my darling! how happy I could have made her! But for this—but for this! Shall I venture even now? No, it would kill her. No, a thousand times, no! I must go. There is only one thing left to me, and that is flight. I felt that there was the one woman that I could love, and I know that I could say, for true love, and I know that I do not risk it! One word of this would kill her! I must go!"

With a groan he flung the other letters aside, took a Continental Bradshaw from the table, and turned over the leaves indifferently purposeless.

"I am to be a wanderer on the face of the earth," he murmured, bitterly. "That is my fate. Well, let it be so; anything, rather than sorrow should dim her eyes or misery break her heart. Where shall I go? He could not decide, but he went upstairs and packed his one portmanteau, then he sat down and wrote a line or two to his mother, saying that business had suddenly called him away, and went—not to bed, but to pace the room till dawn.

CHAPTER XVI.

"Dear me," says the rector, opening his letters with a table-knife, and looking across at Signa and her aunt with a surprised frown. "Dear me, this is very strange! What is it, Joseph?" demands Mrs. Podswell, irritably. "I do wish you wouldn't start me so. What has happened to upset is anything more calculated to upset a person with my nerves, it is such uncalculated exclamations. Is any one dead?"

"No, no, my dear," answers the rector. "Certainly not; it is only a letter from Mr. Warren."

"Oh!" says Aunt Podswell, with a contemptuous sniff. "And what is it?"

Signa feels the blood rush to her face, and she bends over the coffee service with downcast eyes. The rector smooths his chin and coughs.

"Ah! just a few lines, really quite—quite—my dear, saying that business has suddenly called him away, and thanking us for our kindness and hospitality."

The flush dies from Signa's face, leaving her deadly pale, and a heavy weight seems to have fallen suddenly on her heart, but she lifts her eyes bravely.

"Has he gone for good?" asks Mrs. Podswell, in a tone that implies a hope that she may receive a reply to the affirmative.

"I suppose so," says the rector. "He incloses the keys, and he says nothing of coming back."

Aunt Podswell sniffs suspiciously.

"Well, Joseph, I hope no harm may come of the young man's visit."

"Harm, my dear!" says the rector, mildly. "I don't see—"

"Perhaps not; you are not over-acute, Joseph, at the best of times. I don't accuse him of any harm by no means; I only hope that nothing unpleasant may result from his visits to the Grange. You will remember that I was opposed to his having the key for the first."

"Certainly, certainly," says the rector, "but seeing that he had brought the earl's written authority, I don't see how we could have refused him the key, my dear. At any rate, he has gone, and there's an end of it. I think we did right to be chaff to Lord Delamere, and if he should meet Lord Delamere, he will admit that we have done our best for him."

"Yes," says Aunt Podswell, complainingly, "and, as usual, meet with the common gratitude. He does not think it worth while to walk in and say good-bye."

"Gudden business, my dear," remarks the rector, timidly.

Aunt Podswell turns to Signa suddenly.

"You saw him last, last night; did he say anything of the sudden business, Signa?" she asks.

Signa, to whose face something like color had returned, shakes her head.

"No, nothing."

"You see, he never said a word, and there was no post last night. He could not have got a letter."

The foreign malle, my dear."

But Mrs. Podswell's suspicion will not be allayed. She had been ready to quarrel with Hector Warren for coming, and she is ready to quarrel with him now for going.

"There is something wrong about it, I am sure, and you will see, mark my words!" and with a shake of the head and a deep sigh, she retreats to her sofa.

Signa sits silent and patient, while the rector crumbles his toast and "I shall be very glad to come," she said, simply, and Lady Blyte remarked the exquisite taste which prompted the simple reply. "When?"

"Now," said Lady Blyte, with a smile. "I shall be only too pleased to wait until your maid packs for you; your aunt and I will have a chat."

Signa laughed softly.

"I am my own maid," she said. "I shall be ready in a few minutes."

"There was a scene with Archie, but at last he was brought to something like acquiescence by Signa promising to ride over in a day or two, and, perhaps, to ask Lady Blyte's permission for him to spend the day at the Park."

"Good-bye, then," he said, clapping round her. "And, oh, I say! what shall I tell Mr. Warren when I see him. He will be sure to ask after you."

Mr. Warren has—gone, Archie, dear," said Signa, and she spoke she ran from him that he might not see the sudden quivering of her lips.

Lady Blyte cut her visit very short when Signa appeared. She didn't like Mrs. Podswell; indeed, one of her objections to Signa as a daughter-in-law was the fact of her being connected with the "people at the rectory," as she called them.

"They got into the handsome landau, with its crested panels, and its beaded and powdered servants, and on the ride to the Park her ladyship was more graceful than she had been at the Rectory."

"I don't want you to be more bored than you can help, my dear," she said, putting her hand on Signa's arm, and looking at her with a smile that was meant to be very kind. "You must not make this quite a duty visit. We shall be quite alone, and you will be able to amuse yourself in your own way. I shall not be any restraint on you, I hope."

"You speak as if Blyte Park were a prison, and I a first-class misanthrope," said Signa, laughing softly. "I am sure I shall be very happy, and it was very good of you to ask me."

Lady Blyte nodded. Already her heart was warming toward the girl; and she began to understand the charm of the sweet, frank nature which had so captivated her son.

"It is best to understand each other, my dear," she said. "and I want you to feel that you may do just as you like while you are with me. Be happy, and I shall be satisfied."

Then she changed the subject, and talked about the trees in the avenue through which they were just then passing, and the view, and so on, but never a word of Sir Frederic. Signa was too discreet to alarm Signa by mentioning even his name.

When they reached the Park, Signa found that, short as had been the time some preparations had been made for her visit. A maid had been allotted her, and a suit of apartments, which, compared with the modest little bedroom at the Rectory, were simply palatial.

On the table in the boudoir was a box of novels from Madie, and some choice exotics, and the maid respectfully called her attention to a planetarium which had been carried up from the drawing-room.

"Her ladyship wished me to say that she would be glad if you would play any time you liked, miss; it will not disturb her at all."

It was all very pleasant, and Signa, as the maid brushed her hair and arranged the simple evening dress, felt almost guilty of doing Sir Frederic a wrong, when she recalled her refusal.

"Let her see what she has refused," Lady Blyte had said to Sir Frederic; and Signa could not help feeling that the servants, taking their tone from their mistress, were respectful almost to obsequiousness, and a footman threw open the drawing-room door for her as if she were a duchess.

WOMEN WHO SUFFER

Can Obtain New Health Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Every woman at some time needs a tonic. At special times unusual demands are made upon her strength. Where these are added to the worry and work which fall to her lot, weakness and ill health will follow unless the blood is fortified to meet the strain.

Weak women find in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the tonic exactly suited to their needs. Most of the ills from which they suffer are due to blood-poverty—a condition which the Pills readily cure. These pills save the girl who enters into womanhood in a bloodless condition from years of misery, and afford prompt and permanent relief to the woman who is bloodless, and therefore weak. Mrs. Wm. H. Wagner, Rosenthal, Ont., writes: "After the birth of my second child I suffered from troubles which most mothers will understand, without going into details. The doctor who was attending me said an operation would be necessary, but as I dreaded this and as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had been recommended to me, I decided to try this medicine, and I can truly say that after using the pills for some time they made a complete cure and made life more enjoyable than it had been for a long time. I think every woman suffering from the ailments of our sex should give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial as I know from my own case the great benefit that follows their use."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Romans as Fighters.

The Roman became the greatest soldier in the world. He was so because he was a soldier. The Romans studied war just as the Greeks studied art, the men of the middle ages theology, the Egyptians the art of agriculture. They despised literature, art, philosophy, commerce, even luxury and set their whole heart on conquering cities and conquering. In that way they developed very naturally and grew to be the greatest of all nations, for it was their military training that made them the masters of the world.

There was nothing miraculous in the prowess of the legions. It was the natural result of their undivided effort, protracted through generations.

By ANNE CAREW

TWO weeks before Christmas Arthur Loring tiptoed into the playroom and closed the door.

"I know where there's something good to eat!" he said mysteriously.

"Where pie?" guessed Ella and Grace, while Henry turned a somersault and refused to guess at all.

"What's the use?" he asked. "Cook wouldn't give us a teeny piece before-hand, would she?"

"She wouldn't—no! a bite," agreed his brother and sisters sadly, and Arthur added with a chuckle: "But it isn't a pie, you see. It is in the garret!"

"The garret?" In an instant the three had jumped to their feet and were following Arthur up the winding stairs.

In one corner of the garret was a cupboard, far away from the warm chimneys, and here it was Mrs. Loring's custom to keep certain good things to eat. It was cold and dark in the cupboard and yet not cold enough to freeze.

Arthur lifted the cover of a round pasteboard box like a small bonnet box and folded back some tissue paper.

"Oh! Um-m-m!" they all whispered excitedly.

You would have been excited, too, if you had glimpsed that beautiful, big, frosted cake. It was big and round and covered with thick white frosting all over.

In the middle were green leaves cut from citron and some little red candies that looked just like a bunch of bolly.

The children looked and looked, growing hungrier every minute. Finally Grace put out her hand and picked off a ragged drop of icing from one edge, and a small piece of cake came with it. She looked frightened, but put it all in her mouth. It was full of raisins and citron and tasted delicious.

The other children looked scared, but Henry boldly broke off another piece and then Arthur and lastly Ella. When each had tasted a bit there was a hole in the side of the cake as large as a very large egg. Arthur quickly covered the hole with tissue paper, and then he covered the box and closed the cupboard door. They stole downstairs, feeling very guilty indeed.

Well, so it went on for a week before Christmas. First one and then another, never telling, sneaked up to the garret and ate a few crumbs.

It was Christmas eve when Ella took her last crumb and noticed that the frosted top of the cake was beginning to crack.

She was frightened and sorry and very, very unhappy, and so were Grace and Arthur and Henry, for all had been guilty.

Christmas morning they had all their presents, and each one got just what he and she wanted.

"Santa Claus is a good guesser," cried Arthur.

"I should say he was," said Grace as she dressed her new doll. She wondered why she did not feel as happy as usual this Christmas, and then she thought came that it was because she had deceived her parents.

"Now for the surprise," cried Aunt May at 5 o'clock. "All you kiddies go upstairs and get into your best frocks. You must be down at 5:30 sharp!"

Beside the four little Loring's there were their two cousins, Amy and Fred, and before 5:30 the doorbell rang several times, and other children came.

"We've come to your party!" cried the guests excitedly.

This was the surprise father and mother and Aunt May had so carefully hidden from them.

And they knew that the plum cake had been a surprise for their Christmas party, and they had spoiled it.

There was an empty space in the middle of the supper table. The children knew it was for the cake. They had just sat down when the mother came in, carrying the cake on a silver tray. Mother said:

"This was such a lovely cake! Aunt May baked it as a surprise for the children, and it was hidden up in the garret cupboard. Today we found it with all the outside eaten off. Just think what bad little mice have done!"

All the children exclaimed in wonder and disappointment except the guilty ones. Then Arthur got up and cried out:

"It was two legged mice, mother."

"Indeed?" asked mother in surprise. Then his brother and two sisters all got up, and they all made confession and cried a little. But none of them was allowed to have any of what was left of the cake.

RED ACRE FARM

A Rural Comedy Drama Proves a Huge Success

Stirling Dramatic Society Plays to a Packed House

On Friday night the Stirling Dramatic Society in the 111 act comedy drama, "Red Acre Farm" was greeted with a large and appreciative audience.

Through the efforts of some of the business men of the town a new piano was purchased for the opera house, and the object in getting up the play was to help pay for the piano, which was very much needed.

Through the energy of our home talent the play was a great success and netted the handsome sum of $123.45.

Another decided improvement which adds to the appearance of the opera house, is the re-arrangement of a pit in front of the stage, where the piano is placed, with brass railings and green curtains, also, the redecorating of the stage in light fawn colours with gilt panelling.

CAST OF CHARACTERS

Josiah Armstrong.....J. Shaw
Colonel Barnaby Strutt.....R. A. Elliott
Jonah Jones.....F. Hulin
Squire Harcourt.....G. Luery
Harry Harcourt.....H. C. Martin
Dick Randall.....J. S. Morton
Tom Busby.....E. B. Morton
Amanda Armstrong.....Mrs. F. McDowell
Nellie Armstrong.....Helen Morrison
Laura Armstrong.....Mrs. J. Lagrow
Mrs. Barnaby Strutt.....Mrs. Halliwell
"Junior".....Kathleen Dixon

In the second act, an out-door scene in the twilight, Mr. F. Sprentall had charge of the electrical effects, and the changing of the lights from daylight to sunset, then twilight and which gradually developed into a moonlight scene was very effective. The lights in the auditorium cut off, and only the stage in dim light, in which the shadowy forms of the actors could just be distinguished.

The main points in the play were: The turning over of an heirloom, a chain of pearls by Mrs. Armstrong to her husband to pay off the mortgage on the farm. The stealing of the heirloom by their daughter, Laura, who sells it to a travelling salesman. Her sister, Nellie is accused by her father of stealing the necklace and is driven from home. Laura elopes with Harry Harcourt and goes to New York where he deserts her. Squire Harcourt, who holds the mortgage is about to foreclose and turn the old people on the road. Laura, who was deserted by Harcourt in New York is rescued by her sister, Nellie who has become a famous actress. She meets Tom Busby to whom she sold the necklace and receives it back as a wedding present. The girls with their husbands return to their old home as their father and mother are being ejected and the heirloom pays off the mortgage and saves the home.

Some amusing incidents happen during the play. The proposal of Jonah Jones, the farm boy to Junior Strutt, the adopted daughter of Colonel Strutt and the agreement to their marriage forced from the Colonel by them after he had fallen in the well.

The leading parts were cleverly played by John Shaw, as Josiah Armstrong, owner of Red Acre Farm and Mrs. Frank McDowell, as Mrs. Armstrong. The rural characters were well portrayed throughout the play.

R. A. Elliott as Colonel Barnaby Strutt was a typical fun loving Irishman and his wonderful stories of the Baron Munchausen type caused much amusement.

Mrs. Halliwell as Mrs. Strutt played her part well.

Kathleen Dixon in the role of Junior, Col. Strutt's adopted daughter captivated the hearts of the audience and Fred Hulin, as Jonah Jones, Junior's fiancé, was very funny.

Mrs. Jas. Lagrow and Miss Helen Morrison were excellent in their roles, as sisters, Laura and Nellie Armstrong, daughters of Josiah and Amanda Armstrong.

The role of Dick Randall, who is ambitious to become an actor, was well played by J. S. Morton.

Geo. Luery, as Squire Harcourt, holds the mortgage, and his manner throughout is very firm and decided.

Harold Martin in the role of Harry Harcourt, son of the Squire, and Ernest Morton, as Tom Busby, a travelling salesman were exceptionally good.

The costuming, acting and staging were splendidly arranged and the cast as a whole was well represented.

Those in charge greatly appreciated the assistance given by Mrs. Alger throughout the practice and during the evening of the play.

Miss Marjory Meiklejohn gave some very fine piano selections between acts.

The Stirling Dramatic Society are to be congratulated, not only for the excellence performance but the treat given the people of Stirling and vicinity. They have received several invitations to take the play to outside towns and contemplate doing so in the near future.

Capt. Hodge Speaks at Spring Brook

The oyster supper and entertainment held at Spring Brook, on Friday, of last week under the combined auspices of the Women's Institute and L.O.L., No. 442, was a huge success, the receipts for the evening, including the $45.50 realized from the sale of the quilts made by the W.I., amounting to nearly $190, all of which, after deducting necessary expenses goes to the Red Cross Society.

The supper was served in the Orange Hall from five p.m. to 8 p.m., and the tables were well filled nearly all the time. In addition to the oysters the tables were literally groaning under the weight of good things and looked very tempting.

When all had partaken of the supper they repaired to the Foresters' Hall, where the concert was held. Soon this hall was packed to overflowing and a messenger was sent to inform the people still at the tables to stay where they were and as much of the program as possible would be given at both halls.

The speaker of the evening was Captain Hodge, of Campbellford, who enlisted early in the war, and has lately returned from the battlefields of France on a few months sick leave.

Capt. Hodge won the military cross by displaying extraordinary initiative and bravery, and we understand is the only one in this district to hold this distinction. He spoke first in the Orange hall, after being introduced by Rev. S. E. Morton. He then hurried over to the Foresters' hall, arriving in time to take his place on the program. The audience gave him a hearty welcome by vigorously clapping their hands when he mounted the platform. He gave a splendid talk, relating his experiences and giving the audience descriptions and explanations in a very vivid and pleasing style. Everyone was more than pleased with his address.

Rev. J. Hoskins made an excellent chairman and his witticisms between numbers kept the audience good natured.

Lieut. J. R. Cook, M.P.P., gave a splendid address and Rev. W. P. Woodger very ably filled in the time until the arrival of Capt. Hodge with one of his interesting addresses.

The musical part of the program consisted of several duets by Rev. S. E. Morton and Mr. J. F. Baker and piano solos by Miss Dennee and Mrs. A. H. Reid of Bell View.

At the close of the concert, Mr. Baker kindly consented to take charge of the selling of the quilts. The ladies wish to thank those gentlemen who so generously bid on and bid in the quilts, and especially the gentleman who assisted so much in the sale by giving his quilt back to the W.I. to be sold again, and whose generosity is only exceeded by his modesty, as he will not allow his name to be mentioned in connection with the gift.

The entertainment was closed by all singing the national anthem.

COW TESTING NOTES

What Per Cent Do Your Cows Earn?

What per cent on their cash value does your Dairy Herd earn for you each year? Perhaps you have never looked at your dairy income just in that way. But to be fair to yourself you should. A man in business must reckon his earnings on the capital he has invested, on its cost of operation. If he finds part of his equipment inefficient and fails to turn out the goods at sufficiently low cost, he does not hesitate very long in discarding it for a better one or in improving it.

Apply the same reasoning to your dairy herd. If you have a herd that turns out 3000 lbs. of 3 per cent milk for your factory, it is plainly evident that you would get one-third more in cash if they gave you 4 per cent milk. In other words the 4 per cent herd would earn you 33 per cent more cash for the same amount of work.

Where does your herd stand? This whole question of quality in milk is biggest and most vital one facing the dairy farmers today. Whether we in the dairy business like it or not the time is almost at hand when factories, cities, towns, etc., will pay for milk on its food value basis, that is, by test. These of us who take advantage of it will reap the harvest.

Should there be any dairymen in the district who are interested in the cow-testing work or herd improvement, and are not already supplied with an outfit, and desire to take up the work, kindly let me know by postal card or phone, as my time is mostly taken up with old members I might not be able to reach you. Any inquiries for information in regard to the work will receive careful and prompt attention.

Sincerely yours,
J. B. LOWERY,
Dairy Recorder, Frankford, Ontario.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Percy Utman, March 1st, when Mrs. Wm. Bush, Miss Mary McFaul, Mrs. Richardson, Mrs. Earl Morrow and Mrs. Barry Palmer, will be in charge of the programme.

On the evening of Feb. 14th, a very decided successful ten cent tea was held at the home of Mr. Wm. Bush, given by the River Valley Women's Institute. The home was very prettily decorated with valentine decorations and the programme consisted of music and contests. Everyone reported a good time. The proceeds amounted to over $11.00 which will be used for Red Cross purposes.

Mrs. Darius Green, of Toronto, received a cablegram from Major Green on the 15 inst. saying he would sail for Canada the following day. We presume he is coming home on furlough as he was unable to return to France.

Mrs. Herbert Bowen received a letter from her husband, Pte. H. Bowen, in which he wishes to thank Mrs. Thrasher, Mrs. Sprentall, Mrs. Shaw, Mrs. Coulter, Miss Nina Reynolds and the Red Cross Aid, for their kindness in sending the boxes which he enjoyed very much, and hopes to see them all again.

Miss Tessie McNamara, the telephone operator, who remained at her post in the face of danger and sent warnings to all the buildings affected when munitions began to explode in the great fire at Kingsland, N. J., has been rewarded with a gold watch and a purse of gold. Her case is not the first one of the kind. The telephone operators are running the ship wireless operators a close race in the matter of sticking to duty in alarming circumstances.

The Hastings Star in referring last week to the families moving away from that village to seek employment, puts forth a laudable effort to stir up the Board of Trade in that village to secure a munition plant. It is a regrettable fact that lack of public interest is so evident in almost all of the small Ontario towns. Very often the opportunities surrounding our Ontario towns are much more favorable than the bare prairies which is the only asset many of the much talked of western towns have had to build upon. A revival of civic enthusiasm is needed, and much good could be accomplished in every town by the re-organization of the Boards of Trade.

Col. Cecil G. Williams, Assistant Director of Recruiting for the Dominion, is about to undertake a special trip across Canada for the purpose of raising a number of forestry battalions in consequence of an urgent request from the War Office for a large force of Canadian bushmen for work in England and France. Axemen, sawyers, sledgers, cutters, firemen, mill men, teamsters and other men experienced in lumbering operations will be accepted gladly, and as the physical standards are not so stringent as those for infantry and artillery units many men will be able to join who otherwise would be barred from war service. These battalions will be sent forward as soon as possible, as they are needed to do preparatory work for the important advances planned for the spring and summer.

Watch for Elliott's advertisement next week.

Albert Ward spent the week end at home with his parents.

The Stirling platoon of the 25th Battalion commenced drilling on Tuesday.

Miss Florence Linn was home over Sunday.

Everyone who can sew is invited to the Red Cross Meeting in the Agricultural Room, on Friday afternoon at 2.30.

The regular meeting of the W. I. will be held in the Agricultural Room on Thurs., March, 1st. An interesting programme will be prepared by Mrs. Lagrow, Mrs. B. Corrigan and Mrs. Belshaw.

Mr. Don Bird, of Toronto, Inspector of Customs spent the week end here with his family and expected to be in Halifax yesterday in connection with the customs there.

The famous ladies' hockey team of this town will meet the "Old Men's" hockey team in a thrilling game at the arena tonight at 7.30 sharp. Ladies come and see your husbands beaten in the fastest game of the season. Admission 10c.

Mrs. Thos. Montgomery, treasurer of Rawdon Red Cross Branch sent on Feb. 17th, to Toronto headquarters, 80 King St. West, the sum of $416.11 for the Belgian Relief Fund. Thos. Montgomery, Sr., Chas. Thompson and L. Meiklejohn attended a meeting in Campbellford with the councils of the township of Seymour and the town of Campbellford, on Thursday, the 15th and discussed the question of telephone rates with the superintendent of the Bell Telephone Co. The question at that meeting was referred to the users of phones in the different municipalities. Public meetings will be called at once, when no doubt the question will be fully dealt with.

The congregations of St. Andrew's, Stirling, and St. Andrew's, West Huntingdon have each had a very successful year. The bride looked charming in a gown of cream serge, hand embroidery, nixon and lace, and carried a shower bouquet of white roses, her hat was of cream straw and satin rose.

Letter from Gnr. J. C. Sills

France, Jan. 25th, '17
Miss M. O'SHEA, Stirling, Ont.

Dear Minnie:—
Just a few lines to thank you and the members of Stirling Red Cross Society for parcel containing cats, socks, etc., which I received a few nights ago.

The weather is grand, a few inches of snow fell about 10 days ago, and is still on the ground. The nights have been quite frosty and the ground is frozen quite hard.

The absence of rainy weather and mud makes life much pleasanter out here. The artillery on both sides have been very active lately.

I haven't seen Jim for some time, but from inquiries that I made from one of his pals in the 10th Battalion yesterday, I learned that he is in the best of health. I haven't been lucky enough to see Bert yet.

Xmas passed by very quietly, where it was possible the spirit of festivity was not denied and even some of our guns were to be seen decked with holly and mistletoe. The efforts made by the different army organizations were greatly assisted by the countless number of friends and societies at home and the senders may rest assured that their gifts and kindnesses are very much appreciated by the ones out here in the billets and trenches in France.

We are all happy in the thought that long before another Xmas comes, that peace will be restored to the different warring nations.

Well, guess I must close, thanking you again for parcel and send best wishes to all.

Yours sincerely,

GENE J. C. SILLS.

COOKING FOR AN ARMY ON CANADA'S MILITARY "SPECIALS"

4,000 lbs. fresh meat and bacon.
1,200 lbs. beans.
1,500 loaves of bread.
50 bags of potatoes.
1,400 lbs. of sugar.
400 lbs. of coffee.
100 lbs. of tea.
300 gals. of milk.
600 lbs. of butter.
600 lbs. of oatmeal.
Some of the staples provided for a battalion en route Camp Borden, Ont., to Halifax, N.S.

Grand Trunk Commissary Car.

When the full account is written of Canada's participation in the war there will be no more interesting chapter than that dealing with the methods employed in transporting this great army of men from the training areas to the seaboard, over distances, in many instances, of thousands of miles, and thence from our Atlantic ports to the English camps and the trenches of Flanders and France. One side of this work which stands out most clearly is the use of the military dining cars which have been specially created in Canada to provide for soldiers with meals while on their long railway journeys. No country in the world ever faced the problem of carrying over so great a distance by rail so many men and to meet the situation something new in railroad equipment had to be provided to attend to the cooking and serving of meals. The ordinary dining car, as compact as a watch in its arrangement, can feed thirty people at one sitting, but how to dine hundreds of men at one time was the problem. That it has been mastered in spite of the fact that the dining car is a small, narrow, and often crowded space, is a testament to the skill and ingenuity of the men who have been successful in solving the problem. The dining car is a small, narrow, and often crowded space, is a testament to the skill and ingenuity of the men who have been successful in solving the problem. The dining car is a small, narrow, and often crowded space, is a testament to the skill and ingenuity of the men who have been successful in solving the problem.

log apparatus and sixty-foot refrigerator space and store-room capacity for many tons of provisions. Eight cooks work in it without confusion, while a passageway running the whole length of the car allows the military walkers to pass on their way to and from the coaches. In the movement of a battalion two of these cars are used, the military special being run, as a rule, in two sections. The commissary car is placed in the centre of the train, in order that it is easy of access from all the coaches. When a battalion enters the Commissary Department is always the subject of keen interest among the men in khaki. The military cooks are for the time being out of action. The comfort of the men, so far as diet is concerned, depends upon the railway's crew, in charge of a specially chosen steward. The system of service is explained to the soldiers by the steward at the first meal on the train. The non-commissioned officer in each coach appoints his own waiter. Promptly as the minute hand of the watch reaches the meal hour the waiters from the first car on the train and the last car walk through the train to the commissary. The cooks have been preparing for hours and everything is ready and piping hot. Along the great counter is spread the various portions of the meal. It is breakfast time and the morning menu calls for oatmeal porridge, meats, potatoes, bread and butter, jam and coffee. Two men take the big trays of meats and potatoes, another the bread, already sliced and buttered, another the porridge, another the coffee and so to the end. As soon as the first two coaches have been supplied two more squads of waiters arrive until all are served. Within fifteen minutes every man on the train is busy with his meal. Serving over twelve hundred men in fifteen minutes without fuss or furore means organization and that is the secret of this railway's method of handling the problem. The result is that every man shall be amply supplied and nothing delights the cook more than to see boys relish some favorite dish so well that they come back for "more." Three meals a day make happy intervals on the long rail journey. An appreciation of the officers and men for the service given makes the hard work necessary in carrying out the task a pleasure to the men concerned.

LITTLE WORRIES IN THE HOME

These Bring the Wrinkles and Pallid Faces That Make Women Look Prematurely Old.

Almost every woman at the head of a home meets daily many little worries in her household affairs. The care of her little ones, the work about the house, the contribution of these worries. Most of them may be too small to notice an hour afterwards, but they constitute a constant strain that affects the blood and the nerves and makes women look prematurely old. The effect of these little worries may be noticed in sick or nervous headache, flicker appetite, tiredness after slight exertion, and the coming of wrinkles which every woman dreads. To those thus afflicted Dr. Williams' Pink Pills offer a speedy cure; a restoration of color to the cheeks, brightness to the eye, a hearty appetite and a sense of freedom from weariness. Among the many thousands of Canadian women who have found new health and strength through the pills is Mrs. G. Strasser, Acton West, Ontario, who says: "I am the mother of three children and after each birth I became terribly run down. I had weak, thin blood, always felt tired and unable to do my household work. After the birth of my third child I seemed to be worse, and was very badly run down. I found the greatest benefit from the Pills, and soon gained my old time strength. Indeed, after taking them I felt as well as if my girlhood, and could take pleasure in my work. I also used Baby's Own Tablets for my little ones and have found them a splendid medicine for childhood ailments."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists in medicine stores. You can procure them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Frock Fashions.

There are many dresses of stockinet. And numbers of very bewitching gowns are in vogue. Ready-made are quite frequently used for trimming—on crepe, satin and silk dresses. Chenille embroidery is another feature of some new spring gowns. Coat dresses are youthful, becoming and fashionable—you'll see by the early spring exhibits. High-waisted effects are promised a vogue; so, too, is the barrel skirt, the round neck and the combination gown of two kinds of silk.

HOLD UP YOUR HEAD.

It Will Stimulate You Mentally as Well as Physically.

In a letter to Robert Grimeshaw of the New York University, William Muldoon gives advice that it would be well for every man and woman, boy and girl in America to take to heart. He says: "I was taught in early manhood not to throw my shoulders back, stick my chest out, my stomach in, or hold my chin down like a goat, preparing to butt. But to always try and reach some imaginary line with the crown of my head. If one tries to do that, it will tend to the rest of his physical being. That effort to touch something above him not with his forehead, but with the crown of his head will keep every particle of his body in the position that nature intended it should be."

And as a boy I was advised to frequently back up against the wall and mentally in immediate contact with the head goes higher the impulse is to depress his limbs. He accepts the more case. There is more spring to his creature, but a man alive. With the crown of the crown of the head there seems to come a new thing, a more buoyant feeling and a brighter outlook.

They Made Him A Different Man

WHAT B. DRAPER SAYS OF DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

His Troubles Were Numerous and of Long Standing, But Four Boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills Drove Them All Away.

Sedley, Sask., Feb. 22.—(Special)—"Dodd's Kidney Pills made me a different man." The speaker was Mr. Benjamin Draper, well known and highly respected here. He is a fine, healthy representative of the prairie province, all he says he owes his health to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

I was in bad shape all round when I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. Mr. Draper continued. "My trouble came from hard work when I was young. My joints got stiff, my muscles cramped and I suffered terribly from a sore back. I was depressed and low spirited. I was always thirsty and I had flashes of light before my eyes. I had rheumatism and heart fluttering, my appetite was flimsy, my memory was failing and I was troubled with shortness of breath. Four boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills made me a new man."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cured all Mr. Draper's troubles because they all came from sick kidneys. If you have any of his symptoms Dodd's Kidney Pills will help you.

Inflammatory Rheumatism Permanently Cured

NEW BRUNSWICK LADY GIVES FULL PARTICULARS OF HER RECOVERY.

There are many types of rheumatism, but none worse than inflammatory. It was this kind that almost killed Mrs. Edna Warman, of Kentville, N.S. Every known remedy she tried, but the disease increased.

Weak and despairing, she was at her wit's end when the remarkable cure of the Cullen was published. This gentleman was cured of rheumatism by "Ferrozone." Consequently, Mrs. Warman used the same remedy. Here is her statement:

"For five years I have been rheumatic. I tried various forms of relief without success. The disease increased, settled in my joints and muscles; these swelled, caused excruciating pain and kept me from sleeping. My limbs and arms stiffened, my shoulders were lame, and prevented me from working. Week by week I was losing strength, and despair of finding a cure. It was a happy day I heard of Ferrozone. Every day I took Ferrozone I felt better; it eased the painful joints, gave me energy and a feeling of new life. Ferrozone cured my rheumatism, cured it so that not an ache has ever returned. Even damp weather no longer affects me."

Ferrozone has power to destroy Uric Acid, neutralize and enrich the blood, and therefore does cure the worst cases. Mrs. Warman's statement proves this.

By removing the cause of the disease and building up a reserve of energy, Ferrozone is certain to cure Sufferer, isn't it about time to stop experimenting? Ferrozone is a CURE, order to-day, 50c per box, or six for $2.50, sold by all dealers or direct from The Catarthorax Co., Kingston, Ont.

Any woman who has ever had the misfortune to have the hot-water bottle burst just when it was most needed, will appreciate a new bottle which is water-tight but not leaking in hotness. It is light and of metal, and one has but to hold it for several minutes and it will stay hot (and unburst) for hours at a stretch.

This is a good time to pick up an inexpensive evening frock. All the shops are having sales and clearing out winter stocks, and if one will but take the trouble to look there are many gowns which have possibilities marked for very little. Freshened up with new tulle or perhaps a bit of new lace, one gown may be had for an absurdly small outlay.

TRY USING RICE.

It Will Often Take the Potato's Place.

Now that potatoes, owing to increased prices, are no longer within reach for common use, rice is the best possible substitute.

Bolled rice is the best thing in sight. It is at once available, and, measured by its nourishing qualities, or far greater, pound for pound, use in keeping up the strength of those who eat it. Where a family needs to be coaxed into a fondness for rice instead of potatoes, let it serve it some special attractive fashion. There is much in appearance. A mound of fluffy rice, well cooked and lightly piled in the centre of a platter, lends itself to a great variety of appetizing variations.

The secret of properly cooked rice lies in an abundance of rapidly boiling water. After washing the uncooked rice so that the last rinsing water is not even cloudy, the grains should be sprinkled into a kettle of rapidly boiling water, the rice being added so gradually that the violent ebullition of the water will not be checked. There must be plenty of water and every grain of rice must fairly dance up and down.

For instance, try a decoration of green peppers, cut in rings and cooked until tender in slightly salted

ISSUE NO. 8 1917

Water. Lay these green peppers on a bed of rice, and add a dash of oil and a dash of vinegar. The effect is a most delicious and healthy dish.

Dimensions cut in strips and dropped for a few minutes into boiling water make another excellent variation. For boiled rice, the process is exactly the same, but the rice is cooked in a different manner.

A sprinkling of finely chopped parsley over the mound of rice is a pretty as well as appetizing and a few spoonfuls of minced boiled ham, lightly strewn over the rice, is an improvement to the appearance of the dish as well as a piquant addition to the taste.

A little trick which goes a long way toward the satisfactory serving of rice is the use of a fork rather than a spoon. When scooping the rice should never be stirred with a spoon, but with a fork; when serving, where possible, use two forks instead of a spoon. The spoon crushes the delicate particles and gives the rice a mushy look which must always be avoided.

Chicken livers in brown sauce, boiled calves' liver, creamed codfish, or minced meat of any kind, are all improved when served with a border on boiled rice, in which case potatoes need not figure in the meat in any form.

LADY FITZCLARENCE

Gives Times an Interview
On Her Arrival in New York.

New York dispatch: Lady Susan Fitzclarence, whose husband, a captain in the Royal Fusiliers, died at Gallipoli, and a daughter of the Earl of Sandwich, arrived in New York on the Kronland, Sunday. She is on her way to Australia where she will join the British fleet. Lady Fitzclarence is a widow, and her husband was killed in the war. She has given her time and all to the relief of the wounded and stricken, and she has been a most successful observer of the things that move the British people to stand resolutely in the great world crisis.

An interview granted to a coterie of reporters, the Times correspondent indicated, she gave her opinion that Germany's revival of ruthless submarine warfare would not short the spirit of the British people, or lessen the determination to see the end of the war. She said that it would not matter what the British people thought of the submarine, as long as they were determined to win the war, and that they would not be deterred by the submarine.

"The renewal of ruthless warfare," she said, "was to be expected. The German Government did not create any astonishment in England, that a country is not astonished at anything any more. We believe that Germany's announcement is a confession of weakness. It will have the effect upon our prosecution of the war. We have already suffered much, but we can suffer more. No one fears starvation and everyone is philosophic regarding the efforts to conserve food supplies. The food dictatorship is in the experimental stage and hardships are to be expected, but we have abundant faith in our ability to see the thing through. If there is any discontent in England it is because so little is permitted to be published about what our way is doing. It makes us furious to have someone ask why our navy doesn't do something. We know ourselves that no navy in the history of the world has done so much. It has kept the seas open. It has saved millions of men from the transport of millions of men to the front. I know from talks with naval officers some of the hardships these seamen are undergoing. Night after night month after month, without rest, they stand guard around the British Isles. They are in the line through the Mediterranean. You cannot understand what an infinite task it is to be forever trailing the sea for mines and submarines, but it is that watchfulness that is saving the Allies and may save America too."

Asked to talk about what was being done in England, Lady Susan told how already steps were being taken to insure the country against being overrun by men and women reduced to beggary on account of the war. She said that the work at St. Dunstan's, the home in England for blind men, had been turned over to the government during the continuance of the war, was a fair sample of what was being done throughout the country. Sir Arthur Pearson, the periodical publisher, who is himself blind, has charge of the work in England. There are about 150 beds where patients are treated and a great number live elsewhere who are given treatment. The floors are laid with strips of carpet, and the blind men learn to go along things without guidance. The first thing done is to remove the main door that can be reached. For example, there is a boy there, eighteen years old, who lost his eyes, his nose and all the lower part of his face when a bomb exploded in front of him. He is wearing a nose of wax now, and his cheeks have been built up from his thighs. Eventually he will have a paraffin nose, and he firmly believes that, with the exception of his eyes, he will look not very much different to what he did. Most of England's occupations are now being carried on in hospitals built up in the faces of the injured men. The advance in surgery has been wonderful.

"Face men," she said, "are learning how to make boots, carpets, hammers, baskets and many other things. Poultry raising is one of the things taught and the men are becoming so proficient that they can tell the breed of a fowl simply by handling them. The spirit among these men is the very opposite of dismay. One frequently hears them chaffing each other about their misfortune. Some of them are making good headway. Women are being called to every occupation they can possibly fill, so as to release the men for fighting. It is now quite common to see women working. They wear Dutch trousers, blouses of brown and little scooped hats. I confess I give them something of a shock to see women delivering bags of coal in the streets of London, but we have been accustomed to seeing them doing the work of men in other capacities."

Henry Moscovitz, chairman of the Municipal Commission, speaking at the convention of the National Workmen's Committee on "Jewish Rights," said that in the event of a war between the United States and Germany, "the representatives of the Jewish people who are held for unworthy Governments, will sacrifice themselves for America." Let us show America that 500,000 Jewish workmen, with a record of persecution unequalled in the world, will say, if need be, that a country worth dying for is a country worth dying for. The address was greeted with applause and applause. The speaker, who was heading all efforts for peace. An exciting debate followed.

Since the breaking off of diplomatic relations with Germany, the American people have shown great enthusiasm and expressing patriotism by applauding and cheering. At Professor's vault and picture house, on 32nd street, the American flag was hoisted on the screen. The orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner," and all jumped to their feet. A request for Abraham Lincoln was cheered and a wave of applause greeted the Union Jack and Canadian flag, and "God Save the King" brought the house to its feet. Wilson was cheered, and the deposed German Ambassador, Von Bernstorff, was loudly booed, catcalls being hurled at the German sympathizers who dared to clap their hands.

HUN REVISION

OF OLD TREATY

How Germany Wants One
With U. S. Modeled.

Important Clause Regarding Enemy Ships.

A Berlin cable via London, says 15—Foreign Secretary Zimmermann, in an informal discussion to-day with the correspondent of the Associated Press, explained the amended version of the American Prussian treaty of 1799, which Germany is now submitting through the Swiss Government for the approval of the United States. Zimmermann declared that the interest of civilians and the confiscation of private property were preposterous steps, to which his Government was unalterably opposed.

The proposed amended treaty deals in the broadest manner with the private commercial interests and personal liberties of the subjects of both countries. The German proposal would make articles 23 and 24 of the treaty effective immediately upon the severance of diplomatic relations, as well as in the event of a declaration of war, and would extend their protection over all German merchants in the United States and American merchants in Prussia, not in the entire German Empire. Under the treaty as it stands at present, citizens of either country domiciled in the other are guaranteed unmolested residence for nine months after a declaration of war, but may be expelled from fortified cities, or places of military importance. The German proposals guarantee to German subjects in the United States and Americans in Germany freedom to leave the country of their respective residence at a time and by routes to be assigned. They may take with them all their personal property, including money, valuables and bank credits, except as otherwise prohibited by existing embargoes, and protection of themselves and their property shall be guaranteed in accordance with the laws of the country of their residence. There shall be no restrictions of their private rights, other than the judicial sentences imposed on neutrals.

Special provision is made that civilians shall not be put in concentration camps or their property sequestered, except under laws applying alike to all neutrals and a general provision is inserted that German property in the United States and American property in Germany shall be treated as neutral. Another provision protects patent rights and contract relations.

A significant section is one guaranteeing the protection of the sixth Hague Convention in regard to enemy merchant ships to merchantmen of both parties, as well as their cargoes. The provision is extended, however, to forbid the enforced departure of such vessels from their ports without a binding pass from all enemy countries guaranteeing a free voyage to a home port. The same protection would also be extended to the crews of these ships, and the treaty would apply, in all particulars, to the colonies of both parties.

HUN SUB BASE IN CUBA PORT?

London cable says: British officials are greatly interested in the news of the revolutionary outbreak in Cuba, where, they assert, they have reasons to suspect German agents have been at work for a long time. Only a few weeks ago Captain Hans Boehm, a German army officer, was taken from the Dutch steamer "Gedank" at Palmar, he had in his possession a chart of Santa Lucia Bay, where, according to other papers seized at the same time, German agents had secured an oil concession. It is the belief here that the Santa Lucia project was being developed by means of money sent from New York to Havana.

The British naval authorities, while they have failed to discover any German submarine base in the West Indies, declare that they have long had reason to suspect the intention of the Germans to establish one there, and as a consequence they look with suspicion upon the oil project, as possibly a blind to hide the establishment of a refuge from which submarines could operate.

Silfescu-Wilgus seems very disappointed. He says he doesn't care what happens to him. Gynicus—Gee! The first thing you know—fellow will be going off and getting married.

London cable says: The latest reports give five vessels as having been sunk by German submarines. Among these was the American schooner Lyman M. Law, which is said to have been carrying to Italy wood for the making of lemon boxes. The crew of the Law escaped. The other vessels sunk were British steamers and two trawlers. The aggregate tonnage of the sunk vessels, except the trawler, was 8,105 tons.

The American steamship Lyman M. Law was sunk by a submarine, according to a dispatch from the Italian Agency of Rome. The crew, including eight Americans, is reported to have been landed.

According to a cable report from Rome, the Lyman M. Law was not torpedoed, but was destroyed by a bomb placed on board by a submarine. Another report said the ship was sunk by gunfire from a submarine.

The submarine according to the report, was apparently an Austrian, but flew no flag.

SCHOONER LOST AT SEA.

New York dispatch: News of the loss at sea of the British schooner Little Secret, reached here to-day, with the arrival of her captain, Abram Dear, and his crew of four men on the Danish freight steamship Olaf Maersk, which rescued them off the Grand Banks on her voyage from Rotterdam, when their ship, of 89 tons was in distress. After the five men aboard were rescued by the Danish freighter, the schooner was burned so she would not become a menace to navigation.

MORE RAIDS BY HAIG'S MEN ALONG THE FRONT IN FRANCE

Germans, Near Arras, Refusing to Leave Dugouts, Were Killed in Them.

Lines Penetrated At Other Points, And Successful Work Done.

London cable says: On the French front the British in the Ancre and other regions continue to make raids on German positions. Wednesday's most successful operation was north-east of Arras, where King George's men entered 250 yards of German defences and reached their third line. Many Germans were killed and some captured. The Ancre raid was south-east of Grandcourt, where a strong position was captured. German trenches on the Somme and northeast of Ypres have also been entered by the British.

All along the remainder of the front there have been artillery duels and bomb-dropping exploits by aviators of both belligerent groups.

The official report from British headquarters in France reads: "During the day we captured a strongly fortified position southeast of Grandcourt and took a few prisoners. Another very successful raid was carried out this morning northeast of Arras, we penetrated 250 yards of the enemy's defences and reached their third line of defences. Two machine-gun emplacements and a number of dugouts were completely destroyed. Many of the enemy were killed in the dugouts, which they refused to leave. We captured 40 prisoners and a machine gun. Our casualties were very light."

We also entered the German lines last night on the Somme and north-east of Ypres and inflicted considerable casualties.

"A hostile raid attempted east of Arras during the night was repulsed; a second enemy party reached our trenches south of Messines, but was quickly ejected."

"Three of the enemy's ammunition dumps were exploded to-day by our artillery fire. North of Ypres we caused a fire in the enemy's lines."

MANY AIR BATTLES.

Battles in the air have been resumed on an extensive scale on the French front. The Paris official report says: "German aeroplanes last evening dropped bombs in the region of Du-kirk; several of the civil population were killed, and others were wounded. Nancy likewise was bombed by aeroplanes this morning, there being no casualties."

Last night our air squadrons dropped projectiles on aviation grounds at Ennervillers (Aisne) and Rancourt (Somme), on the railway stations at Athies, Hombleux, Voves, Gureux, St. Quentin and Lian,

BRITISH NAVY IS CONFIDENT

Sure the U-Boat Menace
Will Be Overcome.

Troop Moves Unhindered
One Day's Results.

London cable: While naval officers express the belief that the submarine operations may continue at high tension for a couple of months they show the utmost confidence in the ability of the navy to cope with the latest campaign with approximately the same success as the campaign against the U-boats in 1915.

An Admiralty official showed to the Associated Press today the figures of arrivals and departures for yesterday at English ports, proving that a larger number of vessels entered and departed than on any day during the past six weeks. Making a day at random during the period the latest war zone was declared, of 140 British arrivals and departures, only four vessels were sunk, and these figures, according to the official, give an excellent idea of the percentage of loss to vessels taking the English Channel, where British communications are most vital. The Admiralty official says, "most losses have been extraordinarily small at a time when more ships than usual are being routed through the Channel."

Reason of the Kaiser's Visit to Vienna.

London cable: (New York Times) The Daily Express regards the visit of the Kaiser to Vienna as an event of considerable importance. It says Austria, "driving with almost frantic despair to avoid a break with the United States and Spain, and adds: "It was at the conference at Imperial Headquarters, some time ago, which Emperor Charles ostentatiously attended to pay birthday compliments to the Kaiser, that Charles, although expressing many misgivings, was persuaded to endorse the German submarine programme. He was assured that his fears of a break with the United States and Spain were groundless, that neither of these countries would

WILSON MAY NOT AWAIT OVERT ACT

Violations of U. S. Rights, Accumulating, May Cause
Further Action.

TENSION GRAVER
And Congress May Be Again Consulted Before Serious Trouble.

Washington dispatch: The steady accumulation of violations of American rights by Germany made it appear possible to President Wilson would go before Congress to live and prosper without waiting for a series of disaster which might shock the country. There were no indications, however, that he believed the time for such a step had come, and he was stated authoritatively that he would move deliberately and with full appreciation of all the consequences involved.

Official reports of the sinking of the American schooner Lyman M. Law in the Mediterranean by an Austrian submarine added to the tension, for while the act is believed to have been illegal, no lives were lost, and the vessel apparently was warned. The incident was not looked upon as one in itself sufficient to hurry the development of the situation.

Preliminary reports began coming to Government departments showing the piling up about the Atlantic board of goods destined for export to European ports. No serious effect from this condition will be felt, however, until lapse of sufficient time for ships to be sent to American ports to have gone to Europe and returned. While only approximately 10 per cent of American commerce with Europe is carried on American ships, the sailing of vessels of other nationalities in many instances have either been cancelled or postponed. Many American ships are being sent to Europe as a result of the ruthless submarine campaign in time will result in far-reaching disturbance of the industrial life of the United States.

Preparations by the Government for an eventual still are going forward without interruption. Much importance is attached to the work of the Council of National Defence, which is holding daily sessions for the purpose of learning at first hand from Americans of experience what provision must be made to co-ordinate American resources. E. S. Steinitz, of J. P. Morgan & Company, New York, was again before the Council to-day furnishing information gained from experience as head of his firm's huge transactions in war orders for the Entente Allies.

ARMING OF UNITED STATES SHIPS.

It was stated during the day that it was entirely possible the Government would take no steps towards actually furnishing arms to American ships unless and until the President decides he should go before Congress.

While the State Department takes the position that the Government has the right to furnish the arms, other questions which make the situation more complex have arisen. The greatest of these is the determination of the President to do nothing which must give Germany the excuse in any trouble which may follow to place the responsibility upon the United States.

Consul Treadway at Rome forwarded despatches to-day showing that the schooner Law was sunk by "an Austrian submarine without a flag," or, as he put it, by placing a bomb aboard after the vessel had been stopped.

Most serious of the aspects of the case of the Law is the statement that the submarine was Austrian. In replying to the queries that will be sent to Vienna as to the facts of the sinking it is thought more than probable that Austria may make some statement which will precipitate the expected break with that country. Official have admitted that Austria has sent a submarine note identical with Germany's, but so far this country has held off from extending the severance of relations to that country.

The question of the arming of American merchantmen seemed to be temporarily disposed of to-day by the official statement that there were no guns in this country to be had by ship owners unless the Government provided them and the strong intimations that President Wilson would not favor Congress until it was possible to furnish arms. President Wilson is said to feel that he promised Congress he would consult that body again before he took the next step towards protecting American lives and property on the high seas, and an official participation in the arming of merchantmen would constitute such a next step.

The re-detention by Germany of the seventy-two American sailors brought in as prisoners on the prize ship Yarrowdale will result in a permanent demand for their release within a few days.

WESTBOUND FREIGHT EMBARGO.

New York dispatch: An embargo on freight consigned to points west of Buffalo was announced to-day by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railway, effective at midnight to-night. Whether conditions in the Middle West including the presence of food making ferrying across the Detroit River virtually impossible was given as the reason. The rail has 3,328 cars loaded with freight westward, which cannot be moved westward.

Even with equal rights for all men, it wouldn't be long before half the world would be left.

challenge Germany's action other than by the use of diplomatic notes. It was a line to American suggestions to the United States, the Kaiser said, that I would be directed to do so. The United States might as well as make a move to be found by who a war could be ended.

It was even suggested, "a paper called 'The American Ship' would have freedom to navigate the Mediterranean. At the same time, President Wilson was called by the Council of Ministers, and the Council of Ministers gave a long and anxious to Count Castrio, the Spanish Ambassador in Vienna. That was at the house of Count Castrio, and now he has been called by the Kaiser. He is again seeking to remove the fears of Castrio.

Italians Later On Regained
Most of Losses.

Paris cable: Active operations have once more been resumed in the Macedonian theatre, engagements are recorded at a number of points in the Balkans. The French official report reads:

On Feb. 12, after a violent bombardment, large German forces attacked (111) 1100 east of Parolovo. They were able to gain a footing at several points in the trenches of the first line after fierce fighting. An Italian counter-attack, launched at night, resulted in the recapture of the greater part of the occupied trenches. On Feb. 13, after a preparation by heavy and mountain artillery the Italian counter-attack was resumed under good conditions. Fighting continues. Fighting continues.

"On the rest of the front there was only moderate artillery activity. "The English fleet bombarded Neochari (Macedonia). French aeroplanes bombarded the railway station at Kirov. A British air squad, north of Demir-Hissar."

One special number on the program, was the drawing of a 10 cent gift from each of the members present and these were drawn with tickets selling for the same amount. ## The Minstrel

By F. A. MITCHEL

There was a kingdom belonging to the eastern Roman empire the say origin of which was at a certain period a young girl named Eudoxia. She was twenty years old and very beautiful. For many generations the royal family had intermarried among each other. This had resulted in keeping up certain hereditary diseases among them, and they had been very much thinned by death.

When the queen was urged by her nobles to marry that there might be an heir to the throne the heiress was instructed to hunt up some person of royal blood whom she might wed. It was found that there was no man living whom her majesty might marry who was not tainted with some hereditary disease. But a man, Harmodius, was discovered, who had descended from another branch of the royal family, who was young and wealthy. It was represented to the queen that if she did not marry this person she could not marry at all. Furthermore, if she did not have an heir Harmodius would be the only person who would have any claim whatever to the throne.

Now it happened that not long before this marriage question came up Eudoxia had been sitting in the royal gardens one summer day when from beyond the wall came sounds of music. A man was singing, accompanied by a lute. The princess listened and when the song was finished sent an attendant to command the singer to come to her. He did so, and his face and figure proved to be as charming as his voice. The queen kept him singing for awhile, then dismissed him with a gift, which he refused.

Eudoxia resented this refusal, thought in her heart she admired the man the more for it. She had intended to command him to come again to sing for her, but since he would not take pay for doing so it was beneath her royal dignity to accept the service. Nevertheless she could not forget either him or his music. Finding herself pining for him, she tried to drive him out of her mind. Not succeeding in doing so, she resolved to have him introduced into the palace surreptitiously, for should it be known that she was accepting a favor from a subject it would create a great scandal.

She sent one of her attendants whom she could trust to the musician with instructions to tell him the circumstances which compelled the queen to send for him privately and admonish him to keep the secret. This allayed a feeling of resentment that her majesty had not before invited him to sing before her again, and he went to the palace, where the queen received him attended by a single maid of honor who was in the secret.

When it was announced to Eudoxia that there was but one man whom she could legally marry she had become so much in love with the musician, she put her ministers off as long as possible in the matter of marrying Harmodius, and when she could do so no longer directed them to bring her his portrait. This encouraged them, and they set out to obey the royal instructions. They returned much disconcerted. Harmodius declined to furnish his portrait.

Eudoxia was not disappointed at this, for she was every day becoming more and more infatuated with the handsome singer who by royal command came frequently to the palace in secret to sing for her royal mistress. However, the cabinet insisted that the queen should marry, and since Harmodius was the only man she could marry she must marry Harmodius. She resisted their demands until they threatened that if she did not yield they would set up a revolution and put Harmodius on the throne.

"One day when the minstrel came to sing for the queen she told him that it was the last time she could listen to him. She confessed her love for him, but added that she was obliged to marry or lose her sovereignty. The minstrel begged that he might sing one farewell song to her. He was permitted to do so and sang, expressing his love so pathetically that the queen broke down and told him that she would give up her kingdom for him. He told her that his love for her would not permit him to accept the sacrifice, and they parted.

The queen now informed her ministers that she would wed Harmodius or any one they chose. Preparations were made for the wedding, while the queen went in secret. She was solicited to receive Harmodius before the ceremony, but declined. When the marriage came off she would not look at him. After they had been pronounced a married couple her husband said: "My queen."

Eudoxia started. The voice was that of the minstrel. She looked up, and there beside her was the man who had won her heart and for whom she had offered to give up her kingdom.

Harmodius had learned before any one else that he was the only man the queen could marry and, being possessed of a winning voice, had sung to her from beyond the wall of the royal garden and found her heart an easy prey.

The two ruled as King Harmodius and Queen Eudoxia till the Turks overran that part of Europe in which their kingdom lay.

The story of King Harmodius and Queen Eudoxia was long told as an illustration of the power of music, especially over a woman's heart.

Bogus subscription agents have been at work in Canada within the last few weeks, and several people were induced to part with reduced subscriptions to well known periodicals, only to find now that they have been the victims of fraudulent agents. The Post Office department has issued a circular asking the public to be cautious when dealing with agents who offer subscriptions at a sum below the regular price.

WILL GOVERNMENT FAVORIT?

FRANCHISE FOR WOMEN

That the Government will look favorably on his bill regarding the extension of the franchise to women at elections for the Legislative Assembly, and also for municipal elections, is the opinion of J. W. Johnson, of West Hastings. He is not alone in this respect, as there has been a change of heart in a number of members regarding the attitude they took last session.

Many members on the Government side have admitted a change of opinion after the way in which women have done their share during the war. Members of the Opposition are glad they say, to see the change, and there is no doubt that this bill will cause a considerable amount of discussion when it comes up in the House.

DUTY'S CALL

A Message from the Trenches, Sent by Canon Scott, C. M. G., Senior Chaplain of the Canadian First Division

This stirring summons to the young men and the rich men of Canada is an extract from a recent letter received from Canon Scott by a friend in Montreal.

It is a cold, cold day in France. The ground is frozen hard and the men go by with pinched noses and cold hands. The window panes of my office rattle with the sound of big guns, and before me lies a Canadian newspaper with a page devoted to sport, and full of accounts of hockey matches, etc., etc. It is at such a moment as this that one tingles with a sense of disgust and shame. Sport! Hockey matches! Healthy young men, physically fit, playing games at home! Impossible! Where is public spirit? Where is patriotism? Where is the principle of manhood? Are these men content to sit at home and play games and live disgusting, selfish lives, while their fellow Canadians are out here bleeding and dying for them? I blush for a Canada.

I blush for the crowds that throng the rink and enjoy the sport. We have sports, as far as we can for our men here. They have a right to them. But to shirkers at home, nothing but hisses are due! I know I am writing strongly, but it is deserved. As far as I am concerned, I never want to take the hand of any man who is physically fit and has not volunteered to come to the front, unless there has been some overwhelming claim upon him for duty at home. It seems incredible that any man worthy of the name of man can sleep in his bed at night and let other men out here bleed and die for him. Let Canadian mothers and wives know that they could do no greater injury to their sons and husbands, than by holding them back and not allowing them to enlist. It is an injury which will last all through their lives. We need men. We need every man in the Empire. This is no time for sport. If some of the shirkers at home who go to see a hockey match could come out here and see a front dressing station during an action, they would have their eyes opened and their hearts changed. Men, and young men, at home, why do you not throng to the recruiting office? There is the possibility of a crippled body if you do, there is the certainty of a crippled character if you don't, and that is far worse.

And then the millionaires of Canada. What are they giving? Nothing at all adequate. Money has been subscribed, Red Cross subscriptions have flowed in, but more money can come. If a millionaire wants to know how much he ought to give to some war object, let him picture himself on a cold, dark, rainy night lying in a wet shell-hole with both his legs blown off, and no stretcher-bearers near. How much would he give then for help and protection and medical treatment? Would it be a thousand dollar subscription to an ambulance? No, it would run up quickly to seven figures. That thought would give him a clearer idea of his financial duty. Other men have had to lie dying in shell-holes for his sake. What a revelation to Canadians it would be if they could all visit the front. But, alas, Canada will never know what her sons have endured. Day after day, month after month, year after year, cheerfully and gladly they have endured and suffered and fought. If Canada ever forgets these men, my prayer is that she may go to the dogs. You will forgive this strong language. It has the merit of being sincere. The sporting page of a Canadian newspaper is to me like a red rag to a bull, when I think of what our men are doing here. We are going to smash the Huns, but we are a long way from doing it yet. It will take the supreme effort of our whole empire. Every man must put his shoulder to the wheel, even if it be a chariot of fire.

Wellman's W. I. Entertainment a Grand Success

The concert given in the Orange Hall, Wellman's on Friday evening, Feb. 27th, under the auspices of the W. I. was a grand success. Mr. W. S. Martin very ably acted as chairman.

The opening chorus "I love you Canada," those taking part wearing the dress of a Red Cross nurse and shielding Canada was well presented.

The talent was exceptionally good. Miss Fiske, of Belleville, soloist, rendered two beautiful selections which were highly appreciated by the audience. Mr. A. D. McIntosh, always a favorite in his Scotch songs, brought down the house. Messrs. Sharpe and Baker, of C. O. Jct., also contributed to the entertainment and were well received. The Readings by Miss Cranston and Pollock were excellent and well given. A duet by Mrs. and Miss Bailey was well rendered. A flag drill by 12 girls was splendid and showed careful training, under the management of Miss Frances Hinchcliffe.

Capt. Hodge, of Campbellford, gave a very instructive talk on French life experience. Pie. Dailey, of Campbellford, who was wounded in the battle of Ypres interested the audience in a short address and Lieut. Coulter of Stirling also gave an address.

One of the features of the evening was the selling of a Red Cross quilt by ticket, which brought nearly $60 and was won by Mrs. C. O. Clancy. Mrs. T. M. Rein designed a Patriotic quilt which was sold by auction and brought the sum of $15, donated to the Red Cross Aid. A hand-painted cushion, donated by Mrs. F. C. Stuart, was auctioned and purchased by W. S. Martin, of Stirling.

The total proceeds amounted to $117.63. Congratulations, Wellman's W. I.

The W. I. of Wellman's wish to tender a vote of thanks, to those from a distance who so ably assisted in the programme and helped make the entertainment such a success.

SAVAGE DISCIPLINE.

The Way Unruly Indian Boys Were Punished in Former Days.

My grandmother had twelve children, and one uncle undertook to teach me the art of worship. He used to lead me to the sandbanks of the Missouri river, where he would set fire to a pile of driftwood, and then, taking me by the hand, sing sacred songs to the fire and river. In the meantime he threw into them offerings of tobacco, red feathers, and sometimes oak twigs. I never knew the meaning of these offerings, but I always felt that some living thing actuated both the fire and the river.

Another uncle came to us periodically, and every time he came my brother or I suffered at his hands. Sometimes he would rush to the spring, carrying me horizontally under his arm and would plunge my head into the water until I almost suffocated.

His common form of discipline was to let me hang by my hands on the cross poles of the wigwam until my arms ached. My body writhed before I dropped. This uncle seemed to like best to command my older brother to tie my hands and feet with a rope. Then he would order me to resist an ordeal that would make us both cry. In the winter he would also sometimes roll us in snow naked.

The punishment of Indian children is usually in the hands of some uncle rather than the parents. Our punishments were inflicted generally because we had disobeyed grandmother by falling to get wood at evening, had resisted fasting, had fought some Indian boys or had cried without sufficient cause.—Southern Workmen.

Quinine Not a Preventive.

Dr. E. Hafford writes in a letter to the London Lancet ridicules the attempt to prevent malaria by administering quinine. This cures malaria, but does not prevent it, just as diphtheria is cured with antitoxin, but not prevented. He cites the utter failure of five years of quinine administration to prevent malaria in Egypt and of the marked reduction in the disease that immediately followed the enforcement of anti-mosquito measures.

Empty Assurance.

"Bliggins is always willing to apologize when you show him he's in the wrong."
"Yes, but he invariably apologizes in such a way as to open up the possibility of further controversy."

Book Learning.

"Do you think we have too much book learning?"
"There isn't any other kind. As soon as a man finds out anything worth knowing he proceeds immediately to write a book about it."

Presentation to Gunner Carl Clancy

On Monday evening, February 19th, the members of the Wellman's Epworth League and Sabbath school, met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. Clancy and made the following presentation.

DEAR GUNNER:

Once more we have come to the parting of the ways and one of our number is going from our midst. As you go, we feel we shall be separated in person but not in heart for you, by your kindness, willingness, and many sterling qualities, have made, in this your home community, true friends, who have met here tonight with the feeling of this verse in their hearts—

"When we asunder part,

It gives us inward pain.

But we shall still be joined in heart

And hope to meet again."

We have come here to-night feeling sad, yet proud,—sad because you are leaving us and proud because you have answered the noble call from your King and Country, and that you felt it your duty to go. As you train here, as you go overseas, as you go to the scene of action; there will go with you the earnest prayers of the people at Wellman's for your protection and safe return. In hours of darkness, discouragement and amid the strain and temptation of military life may you ever find comfort in Him above, and find in Him, "A Friend that Sticketh closer than a brother."

We feel that we cannot let you leave without giving you some tangible expression of our interest in you, our regard for you and of our gratitude for your faithful and willing service in league and Sunday School work and any place of work that tended toward the betterment of the community. We ask you to accept this signet ring with our best wishes, and when wars shall cease, it be a part of God's great plan to bring you back to your home and to us.

Mr. Charles Morton by request of Mr. Montgomery, on behalf of the township, then presented Carl with a wrist watch.

In concluding Gunner Clancy then voiced his appreciation of the kindness of the league and Sunday school members, also the township and said he was no better to do his bit than the other fellows who had gone.

Lunch was served and a very enjoyable evening spent with music and games.

Patrolling Eight Miles of Fence.

To prevent wolves, coyotes and other wild animals from entering a pasture where experiments in sheep raising were being conducted hunters employed by the forest service were required to patrol eight miles of fence twice a day in the Wallowa National forest, in Oregon.

Two thousand five hundred and sixty acres of choice land were inclosed to conduct experiments with a view to ascertaining whether it was more advantageous to care for sheep in pastures than to herd them on the open ranges. A coyote proof fence eight miles in length inclosed the pasture. It was made of woven wire about four feet high, with two strands of barbed wire across the top.—Popular Science Monthly.

True Joy of Fishing.

To go a fishing is not of necessity to catch fish, nor the catching of fish the only pleasure in fishing, else would the toilers and fishing fleets exist in a very paradise piscatorial. No: the true joy of fishing consists, as does all other true joy, in anticipation. The struggle of the finny victim over and the prey landed, a kind of sorrow pervades the gentle angler.—E. L. Sothers's "The Melancholy Tale of 'Me'."

Ottawa, Feb. 24.—No specific advice on the point has been received, but in official circles here it is thought that the restrictions imposed by the British Government in regard to the import of fruit, cocoa, books, etc., will not affect in the slightest, forwarding of such comforts to Canadian soldiers. The restrictions rather are interpreted to apply to imports in the national sense, and not to individual packages sent to men of the expeditionary forces.

EDUCATING OYSTERS.

How the Japanese Teach Them to Make Pearls.

In Japan there is a great center of oyster culture. It was the Japanese who first taught the world to cultivate oysters. They have been successful in this because they have learned to educate the oysters. They have found that oysters must be educated and made to work for man. After many years of study and experimentation, they have discovered the method in use to day.

The farm has an area of about fifty square miles, and the water varies in depth from five to fifteen fathoms. The farmer selects the spots where the larvae of oysters are most numerous and then the plants are sown. These are then removed and placed in special beds, where they lie undisturbed until the third year.

An oyster will not produce a pearl unless it is irritated by some foreign substance. As soon as it feels this it proceeds to cover it with murex, layer by layer, until after a few years it has made a pearl. When large enough the oysters are taken from their beds and carefully opened; a tiny speck of some foreign substance is introduced into their bodies, and they are released in the sea. By the end of from three to five years the oyster has coated the foreign substance with murex and this has become a pearl.

All the work on this oyster farm is done by women, who bring the oysters up and down by diving.

THE DOOR TO HEALTH

Is Through the Rich, Red Blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Actually Make.

The blood is responsible for the health of the body. If it is good, disease cannot exist. If it is bad, the door is shut against good health, disease is bound to appear in one form or another. One person may be seized with rheumatism or sciatica, another with anasarca, indigestion, heart palpitation, headaches or backaches, unstrung nerves, or any of the many other forms of ailment that comes when the blood is weak and watery. There is just one certain, speedy cure—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They make new, rich, red blood, and this good blood strengthens the whole system and brings good health and happiness. Thousands owe their present good health, some, life itself, to the pills. Mrs. Charles Goddard, Chatham, Ont., says: "Four years ago my nervous system was so run down that I seemed nothing but a burden. I doctored for two years with little or no benefit. I could neither work, eat or sleep well. While in this condition, a friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before doing so, I thought I would consult my doctor, and he told me he knew of no better medicine for building up the nervous system. I started to take the pills, and after a short while found they were helping me. I took the pills for nearly three months and am thankful to say that they completely cured me. Ever since I have kept a box of the pills in the house, but have not found it necessary to take them."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine, or they will be sent by mail postpaid at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

PORTLAND CEMENT.

Secret of Its Contents Was Very Closely Kept.

Portland cement only is defined as a product made by grinding together and burning in a kiln, a mixture of lime and clay, and the resulting product is known as Portland cement. The only way that the secret of its contents was kept so closely was by the fact that the only person who knew the secret was the man who invented it. He was a chemist, and he was very clever. He found that if he mixed lime and clay in a certain way, and burned them together, he could make a product that would set like stone. He called this product Portland cement, after the city of Portland, Maine, where he lived.

But a curious episode which determined to ascertain his true nature and motives, had a sample analyzed by a chemist, whose result showed that the cement was not what he claimed it was. He was very angry, and he began to extend the secret, but he could not get any of his neighbors who finally induced him to do so. He was very clever, and he was very cunning. He found that if he mixed lime and clay in a certain way, and burned them together, he could make a product that would set like stone. He called this product Portland cement, after the city of Portland, Maine, where he lived.

PROHIBITION AND CONSCRIPTION

(Chicago Tribune)

Prohibition is a denial of free will. It asserts the right of the state to command the individual. If it were only for the right of personal selection would be merely moralistic meddling. It is not the moral of Smith and Brown to determine by law what Jones shall do for his own good unless Smith and Brown prove that Jones is not doing what he ought to do imposes a burden on them.

They are justified in objecting to Jones' habits if those habits cause them trouble. They then are justified in putting a law on Jones.

The community is justified in interfering with the volition of its citizens only as it regards its own security as important and considers that its citizens, left to their own free will, might or would do injury to it.

There is no excuse whatever for any law requiring any kind of conduct from a person if that conduct injures no one but himself. So long as the individual alone is concerned his conduct must be left to himself. He will take the consequences.

There are many ardent proponents of restrictive and custodial laws. They intervene to say what people may see at the movies; what they may read; what they may drink; how long they may remain in saloons and restaurants; what they may see in the theatres. Occasionally we attempt to say what they may wear.

If the individual may be regulated thus and commanded thus for the benefit of the state, logic suggests that he may be compelled to do other things for the state.

THE HOUSE FOR GIFTS.

Importers and Dealers in China, Glass, Fancy Goods and Antiques.

When a state is in military danger it is in much greater danger than it is when saloons threaten its security. When it is in military danger we permit each man to consult his own will and his conscience his desires and his timidity. We permit him to do as he wants to do, regardless of the needs of the state.

If he has a right to exercise his own judgment when the state is in great danger, he certainly has the right to do so when his own personal interests are concerned. We regulate habits and will not regulate men as to duty. We may require a man to stop drinking because it is bad for the state, but we have not seen that it is necessary to compel him to serve the state if it is bad for the state to permit him to escape from service.

Prohibition and compulsory service are two pieces from the same block of logic.

Service to Alaska

C. P. R. Steamer Will Make Three Trips for Tourists.

As was the case during the past season, the C. P. R. steamer Princess Charlotte, will make three round trips in the Alaska tourist service next year, which becomes effective June 8, 1917.

The list of tourist sailings between Victoria, B. C., and Skagway, Alaska, which has just been announced by B. C. Coast Service, provides for three round trip sailings for the Princess Charlotte, seven for the Princess Alice and seven for the Princess Sophia, making 17 round trip sailings all told for the summer season of 1917.

The advent of the palatial steamship Princess Charlotte in the Alaskan tourist trade last summer was such a pronounced success that the company had no alternative but to arrange for her return to the northern next year, when it is expected tourist travel north will break all records. The schedule has been arranged earlier with a view to giving plenty of time for the arrangement of advance bookings.

The company proposes making a feature of this delightful travel route, and specially illustrated and descriptive literature is being prepared for distribution all over the continent. The accommodation on the Princess Charlotte will be largely reserved for parties booking in the east. A large number of inquiries regarding the northern tours have already been made in the east by parties who were unable to take the trip last summer.

What Sir Robert Borden Has Done

With that spirit of national dedication which is getting to be characteristic of Opposition journalism, the Toronto Star concludes an editorial disparagement of Canada's war effort by asking:

WHAT HAS SIR ROBERT BORDEN DONE?

Party politics have reached a low level in Canada when a decent newspaper is unhampered to ask such stupid, un-Canadian questions. Nevertheless, we are going to try to forget the spirit that prompted it and to answer to the best of our knowledge and ability. Here are a few things that Canada has achieved under Sir Robert Borden.

(1) Raised, trained, equipped and contributed to the Allied Cause $55,000 men.

(2) Voted $800,000,000 for war purposes.

(3) Established a munitions industry that employs 350,000 persons, engages 650 factories, has sent $500,000,000 worth of munitions to Britain and has contracted for $700,000,000 more.

(4) Loaned the British Government $250,000,000 to finance munition-purchases.

(5) Supplied Australia, New Zealand and Allied Governments with war orders totalling more than $150,000,000.

(6) Supplied Great Britain's armies with $60,000,000 of hay, oats and flour.

(7) Successfully raised three loans, and is preparing to raise a fourth, in Canada, thus relieving the financial strain upon the Motherland and, in addition, placing $75,000,000 of the money so obtained at Britain's disposal.

(8) Transformed herself from a country that was borrowing abroad before the war at the rate of $1,000,000 a day, to a country that is financing her own war expenditure to the extent of $1,000,000 a day, and extending enormous credits to Britain besides.

(9) Increased a total trade of $1,000,000,000 in 1914, to a total trade of $2,000,000,000 in 1917.

(10) Changed a balance of trade against us in 1914, of $140,000,000, to a balance of trade in our favor in 1917 of nearly $400,000,000.

(11) Adopted war taxation measures which, in addition to defraying the running expenses of the country, contribute a considerable sum toward the expenditure on war.

(12) Created a War Purchasing Commission which has taken the purchase of all army supplies out of politics, and has bought by tender, supplies to the value of $100,000,000.

(13) Created an independent national Pensions Commission, and adopted a scale of pensions more generous than that fixed by any of the other belligerent countries.

(14) Created a Military Hospitals Commission which is doing splendid work looking after returned convalescent soldiers and which is now being copied by Australia.

(15) Created a Scientific and Research Council, composed of the country's leading scientists and engineers, to study new processes for developing Canadian resources and industry.

(16) Took effective steps to prevent Canadian nickel reaching the enemy, at the same time seeing that a plentiful supply reached Great Britain and her Allies. Meanwhile, has begun the erection of a refining plant that will refine Canadian ores on Canadian soil.

(17) Secured adequate transportation for Canadian exports at a time when marine tonnage was at a premium.

(18) Obtained a preference for Canada in the matter of British and Allied purchases.

(19) Rendered effective aid to western farmers at a critical period, thus ensuring an expansion of production at a time when increased production was an essential in the conduct of the war.

(20) Is entering upon a most generous scheme of land settlement and vocational training for returned soldiers at the conclusion of the war.

These are a few of the things, but far from all, that Canada has done under Sir Robert Borden during thirty months of the most tremendous conflict in human history. They are achievements that have won, and deserved, the applause of Britain and her friends, and, what is more satisfying, have provoked the angry astonishment of the Empire's foes. Only by men here in Canada whose mad passion for power overwhelms their national pride do they slurred over or ignored.

CURIOUS COINCIDENCE.

Story of a Lucky Stone and a Trio of Accidents.

George F. Kuuz, the well known gem expert, relates this little story of a lucky stone and the adventures of its owners:

"Some years ago a meteorite was given to Edward Heron Allen, the famous writer on palmistry and the violin, and this gift was always worn it about him. One morning he awoke to find that the entire roof above him had fallen in except just that portion over his bed.

"He told the story to one of the best known ladies in Boston, one who is known for her public spirit, her love of art and her faultless manner of entertaining. This lady successfully urged Allen to give her the meteorite.

"A few days later while out driving a great truck with two runaway horses attached to it struck her carriage. Instantly she raised her hand to protect her face. The muf was almost cut in two, but the lady was not hurt. A few days later while she was walking under some scaffolding it fell, and the open part where the hoists went up proved to be just where she stood. Although surrounded by rain, she remained unharmed.

Whether the stone was a factor in averting disaster to its owners in their moments of peril is, however, a matter apart from the facts in the case.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

HE KEPT THE TOOL.

And Prized It Because It Had Never Done Dirty Work.

"I was throwing up dirt from an excavation in the pavement one day," said an old laborer, "when a little old chap with white hair stopped to look on. I was as big as two of him. After a minute or two I rested on my shovel and looked up at him. Said I:

"If you had to do work with a shovel for your living you'd starve to death before you could make a trench deep enough to bury you in."

"I thought that was a smart thing to say, and I laughed. Then he answered me. He was a slow speaking man with a sort of drawl.

"I might starve—as you say," he said, "and yet I have a trade in which I use a tool very much like yours. In fact—many people who work at my trade—use the tool—to shovel dirt and ditch—with—as you do—with—yours. This is—the tool."

"He handed me a steel pen.

"Is it a joke?" I asked.

"It is—a tool—to make a them—with," he nodded. "That is—part of my trade. My name is—Twin—Mark Twain."

"I have the pen yet," concluded the laborer, "and no dirt was ever shoveled with it."

Rulers of England.

The first to rule over all England was Egbert, king of Wessex, who united all the various petty kingdoms and became king of England in 827. The greater kingdom was disrupted from 875 to 958, when the Danes ruled north of the Thames. In the latter year King Edward reunited the kingdom, and since that time it has never been partitioned.

Between Edmund Ironside (1016) and Edward the Confessor (1042) three Danish kings ruled all England—Canute, Harold I. and Godwin.

The first king of Great Britain was James I. (1603). The first king of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was George III. From the conquest of Ireland in 1172 by Henry II. the kings of England were styled lord of Ireland until the assumption of the title king of Ireland by Henry VIII., and thereafter this title was used until the act of union in 1801. The imperial sovereignty of India was assumed by Queen Victoria.

A Vegetable Garden for Every Home

IN this year of supreme effort Britain and her armies must have ample supplies of food, and Canada is the great source upon which they rely. Everyone with a few square feet of ground can contribute to victory by growing vegetables.

Four Patriotic Reasons for Growing Vegetables

1. It saves money that you would otherwise spend for vegetables.
2. It helps to lower the "High cost of living."
3. It helps to enlarge the urgently needed surplus of produce for export.
4. Growing your own vegetables saves labor of others whose effort is needed for other vital war work.

The Department of Agriculture will help you

The Ontario Department of Agriculture appeals to Horticultural Societies to devote at least one evening meeting to the subject of vegetable growing; manufacturers, labor unions, lodges, school boards, etc., are invited to actively encourage home gardening. Let the slogan for 1917 be, "A vegetable garden for every home."

Organizations are requested to arrange for instructive talks by practical gardeners on the subject of vegetable growing. In cases where it is impossible to secure suitable local speakers, the Department of Agriculture will, on request, send a suitable man.

The demand for speakers will be great. The number of available experts being limited, the Department urgently requests that arrangements for meetings be made at once; if local speakers cannot be secured, send applications promptly.

The Department suggests the formation of local organizations to stimulate the work by offering prizes for best vegetable gardens. It is prepared to assist in any possible way any organization that may be conducting a campaign for vegetable production on vacant lots. It will do so by sending speakers, or by supplying expert advice in the field.

To any one interested, the Department of Agriculture will send literature giving instructions about implements necessary and methods of preparing the ground and cultivating the crop. A plan of a vegetable garden indicating suitable crops to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free of charge to any address.

The Adopted Grandmother

By CLARISSA MACKIE

OTH Burnham twins pressed their noses against the window pane of their playroom and watched the snowflakes come whirling down out of the gray clouds above. Across the street, in the upstairs front room of the house, the twins could see that a fire was blazing on the hearth, and a little group of people sat before it. It was the day before Christmas.

"It's Paula's grandma," said five-year-old Alma to her sister.

"I saw her when she came," returned Alice. "She has come to spend Christmas. That is her room with the cozy fire. See, Paula is sitting in her lap. I wish we had a grandma."

"So do I," said Alma sadly. "But ours are both dead. 'I'd-I'd just like to borrow Paula's grandma for a while!'"

"That would be fine," agreed Alice, "only what would Paula do?"

"I've a good mind to go out and find a grandmother for myself," Alma said slowly.

"Alma," cried her sister, "let's!"

Ten minutes later the twins, unseen by any one and clad in their scarlet coats and caps with white leggings pulled over their rubbers, went down the street under a huge umbrella which Alma declared belonged to cook, for she had found it in the kitchen entry. Their mother was downtown somewhere shopping, and Nora, the nursemaid, was supposed to remain with them. But Nora had stepped out to mail a letter, and when she came back the twins had disappeared. But how could any one dream that they had gone out to search for a grandmother?

Once when father had asked them what they wanted most for Christmas they both declared in unison:

"Oh, a grandma, please, daddy!" But daddy and mother had both looked so sad that the twins were much ashamed.

"Where shall we go first?" demanded Alice, holding tight to her sister's hand under the big umbrella.

"I've been thinking," said Alma, turning down a side street. "Do you remember once when we were teeny, weeny little girls such a pretty old lady stopped us on the street and kissed us both and said we looked like our Grandmother Burnham?"

"She had a cane," added Alice, "and nurse said she was mother's auntie, only they didn't speak."

Alma knew where the pretty old lady lived, for she had seen her several times walking in the garden. Through the gate and trudging up the snowy path went the twins, the big umbrella bobbing uncertainly as "ma," said Alma, they approached the house. A fire was crackling on a hearth. Seated before the fire in a great armchair was the pretty old lady, looking very lonely indeed.

"She looks very lonesome," whispered Alice, for they were on the porch now and were peering in the window.

Alma went to the door and rang the bell, and presently it opened and a very stout, comfortable looking maid looked down at them.

"Well, Little Red Riding Hood," she smiled. "What do you want?"

"Please," said Alma boldly, "we came to see our grandmother."

"Bless me! Miss Hemmenway your grandmother? You better go right in and tell her. She's mighty lonesome this Christmas eve!" She opened the parlor door and admitted the two.

Miss Aurelia Hemmenway lifted her head and stared at the twins.

"We need a grandma," faltered Alma, "and you would make such a lovely one."

"Please do!" whispered Alice shyly, and somehow the little arms found their way around her neck and soft baby cheeks were pressed against hers.

"You are James Burnham's little girls?" asked the pretty lady. They nodded, and she buried her face in their curls. "I am almost your grandmother, children; your own grandma was my sister; I am your mother's aunt. But I will be your grandma if you like, dears."

An hour later James Burnham and his wife rushed up on Miss Hemmenway's porch and looked through the window. Sitting before the fire was Aunt Aurelia, with whom they had quarreled years ago, when the fire of her chair was a twin gloriously happy to the possession of a grandmother.

It was a beautiful Christmas for all of them. The twins neglected their tree and their toys for their new treasure, and as for Miss Hemmenway—she declared it was the happiest Christmas of her life.

A RIDE ON THE PILOT.

It Was Too Exciting a Railroad Trip to Be Repeated.

An eastern man was riding by rail through the Rocky mountains. A friend told him about riding on the pilot of the engine through some grand mountain scenery, and the easterner was eager to have the same experience. At the first opportunity, therefore, he asked the conductor whether his friends and he could ride on the front of the engine. The conductor very promptly said they could not. Nothing but a permit from the superintendent of the line would entitle any one to such a privilege. As the superintendent was a thousand miles away, it seemed a hopeless case. The easterner spoke of his disappointment to the Pullman conductor, who told him that perhaps the affair could be managed after all. Through his diplomacy it was arranged somehow or other, and at the next station four of the party, including two ladies, took their places on the pilot.

The scenery was some of the grandest in the new world, but the easterner could not enjoy it. The two slender ladies in front held his gaze with a sort of horrible spell. He could not look away from them. He felt almost the same sense of insecurity and terror that a man would feel if he were suddenly whirled off into infinite space.

Suddenly, as the train rounded a curve, he saw a hand car on the track ahead. His companions saw it at the same instant. A man stood beside it and was making desperate efforts to remove it from the rails. He got the wheels off, then the engine bore down upon him, he fled.

The engineer did not see the hand car at once, he was at the moment looking at his gauges. When he did see it was too late for him to check the speed of the train. He could only look on.

The hand car was on the side of the track nearest the man from the east. He had an awful half minute. He rose to his feet, not knowing what he did, and leaped far over in front of the others. His eyes were riveted upon the hand car. He saw nothing, realized nothing except its approach.

The engine struck the hand car with terrific force, and the pilot lifted it from the rails. It rolled up, ground against the very place where the easterner had been sitting, plowed a deep groove in the ironwork and then tumbled over at the side of the track.

The frightened engineer set the brakes and brought the train to a standstill. Not one of the party was even touched, but they had had enough riding on the pilot. And, indeed, it was the end of such riding for others. From that time all such trips were strictly forbidden.

It was two years before the man from the east could see a hand car even standing harmlessly beside a railway track without turning faint and dizzy.—Youth's Companion.

A Challenge.

What do you know about the Hall electrochemical production of aluminum, the Acheson process for manufacturing carborundum, the Wilson method of applying acetylene industrially, the Lovejoy & Bradley plant for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, the Gayley invention of the dry air blast in iron making, the Herreshoff method of electrolytic copper refining, the Frasch process for refining crude oil? We feel safe in asserting that the great majority of our readers could not name offhand, much less describe, any one of these eight discoveries. Yet they are basic steps in our conquest of nature. We are all indebted to them every day of our lives.—Collins's Weekly.

The Basis of National Feeling.

"National feeling is obviously only a conspicuous instance of those corporate enthusiasms which are spontaneously generated as soon as one recognizes himself to be a member of a group. Whether one belongs to the French Institute, is a Daughter of the Revolution, a brakeman on the Baltimore and Ohio, a delegate to a religious congress, is rooting for Harvard or ascending his genealogical tree, he finds," writes James Harvey Robinson in the Century, "his personality agreeably expanding. Paltry, diffident and discontented 'I' becomes proud and confident 'we.'"

Some Odd Christian Names.

An appellant rejoicing in the curious name of Rezia at the last sitting of the Somerset tribunal caused an inquiry where he got it from. He replied from the Bible, where it is only mentioned once—I Chronicles vii, 39. There lived for many years in the village of Twer-ton, Bath, one named Miah. He was born a twin, and his parents thrifflily divided the predestined name of Jeremiah between them, the other babe being christened Jere.—London Globe.

Good Worker.

"And you say he is an industrious worker? You astonish me. I had formed just the opposite opinion of him." "He's the most industrious worker I ever saw. He probably works as many as a dozen people a day, or tries to."—Houston Post.

I don't want what de rich man's cot, kaze I know mighty well he ain't gwinter turn it loose, an' I don't want money what ain't got a blessin' on it. Howsever, money looks mighty good on a cold maw'nin'.—Atlanta Constitution.

FIRST GRAND OPERA

Peri's "Dafne" Marked the Start of a New Era in Music:

WAS SUNG ONLY IN PRIVATE.

Its Performances Were Confined to the Palace of Corsi, and the Score Is Lost to the World.—The First Opera Given in Public Was "Euridyce."

There is no form of music so generally popular with all classes today as opera. The combination of action and music, opera has made extensive strides during the last century, although its origin is very remote. It came through a gradual course of development from almost the beginning of the Christian era. Earliest dramatists were such eminent men as Aeschylus and Sophocles, who accompanied their spoken drama with a band of lyres and flutes.

But grand opera as we understand it today originated about the end of the sixteenth century, when Jacopo Peri's opera "Dafne" was first presented. It originated through the gathering of a small party of music lovers at the home of a Florentine nobleman. These patrons of art set themselves in the spirit of the renaissance to rediscover the music of the Greek drama.

Theories grew into actualities when a performance of "Dafne" was celebrated in the palace of Corsi in 1595. This opera was successfully performed several times, but always in private, and now the score is not discoverable.

The public had the privilege of hearing Peri's opera five years later, when two settings of "Euridyce" were made, one by Peri and the other by Caccini. Both the operas were produced in part during the marriage celebration of Henry IV. and Marie de Medici at the Petit palace on Oct. 6, 1600.

Measuring the accomplishments of these enthusiasts with the opera of not many years later, the former must appear ridiculous and very wide of the mark. But here at least was a step in an untrodden path. Opera was now on a basis which admitted of development. Its career had begun. "Euridyce" was the first Italian opera ever performed in public, and the work excited an extraordinary amount of attention. The score was first published in Florence in 1600 and was dedicated to Marie de Medici, and it was printed in 1608 in Venice, a copy of the latter being well preserved in the library of the British museum.

For fifty years "Euridyce" remained the luxury of nobles, being performed only before courts during special festivals. Monteverde added the overture to the Peri opera.

The next important operatic work to be produced was that of Monteverde, entitled "Orfeo," which was presented in 1607, and a year later "Arianna." These two operas left Peri and his comrades far in the rear. Work along this line developed slowly until 1637, when the Teatro di San Cassiano was opened at Venice, which was the first public opera house. Now that the masses had a voice in the matter, it soon became evident that the people must be pleased and the Florentine ideals forgotten.

Later in the century the melody of the aria was enriched by two composers named Cavalli and Cesti. The opera, by stimulating solo singing and by reviving a taste for the beauties of popular melody, supplies the necessary incentive for the elaborating of sweet sounding and finished melodic themes. Cavalli was a tireless worker, and he produced close to forty different operas, none of which has survived.

Scarlatti, who followed, was another tireless worker, his first opera having been produced in Rome in 1679, after which he brought out more than sixty others. From that period to the present day the Italian composer has held his place with the greatest of any countries and has produced more operas than all the other countries combined.

The earliest operas in France were composed by Lully at the end of the seventeenth century and Rameau at the beginning of the eighteenth century, but they were little more than imitations of the Italian style. The basis of the French opera was laid by Gluck in the latter half of the eighteenth century. Meyerbeer, Rossini, Gounod and Thomas represented the most popular of the successors of Gluck, with the more modern Massenet and Charpentier.

In Germany until the rise of Wagner the opera was marked by little national originality. Mozart was the first opera writer among the German composers. To Weber especially will remain the glory of having first founded a distinct German operatic style.

One View of Golf.

Many anecdotes are told of some of the curious ideas held about golf by people to whom it was a new and strange game before its modern popularity had set in. One woman who had evidently had a new view of the game said: "It is played by two men. One is a gentleman and the other is a common man. The common man sticks a ball on a lump of dirt, and the gentleman knocks it off."

One of the great lessons of this life is to learn not to do what one likes, but to like what one does.—Hugh Black.

He Laughs Best Who Laughs Last

By SADIE CILLOTT

Dan Everham entered a railway station, bought his ticket and, stretched out on the platform, waited for the train. He was next to a very pretty girl. Outside on the platform was a party of youngsters who had been seeing off a newly married couple. Passing by Dan Everham's window, where he sat near the pretty girl, one of the party threw a handful of rice against the windowpane. Then all of them waved goodbyes and laughingly passed on.

This bit of fun did not trouble Dan much; but, seeing the pretty girl beside him blush a deep red, he felt sorry for her.

"I suppose," he said to her, "that those persons think that they perpetrated a very good joke."

"It was horrid of them." "This was the beginning of a conversation that lasted till long after the train started. Meanwhile those in the car who had seen the rice throwing did not doubt that they had a bride and groom aboard. Dan was got up with sufficient respectability for a groom, and the most travelling dress of the girl was appropriate for a bride. Then, too, Dan was altogether too polite and attentive to have been long married, and since they were travelling together they were not supposed to be bachelor and spinster.

In the seat opposite the girl sat a woman from New England. There is nothing more interesting to a woman than a bride, and this person was a motherly creature who felt her heart go out to the young thing who had but just embarked in the sea of matrimony, a sea that the Yankee had found a troubled one. She entered into conversation with the supposed bride.

"Nice day," was her entering wedge. "Quite so," was the laconic reply. "Going far?"

"I shall travel all day."

"You must be tired?"

"Why do you think so?"

"Oh, there's a lot to be done in preparation for a wedding."

The girl sat at once that the party who had thrown the rice had given a wrong impression. But instead of correcting it, which would be embarrassing, she looked down at an open novel in her lap and said nothing. The woman was not to be put off.

"You're the image of a girl I knew in Salem. I wonder if you're any relation to her. Your name ain't Twitchell, is it?"

"No, it isn't Twitchell."

"Or Saulsbury?"

"No," and to shut off further inquiry the girl told her her name was Edie Trobridge.

"I guess it's got some'n else to it now."

"Something else! What else can it be?"

"Well, I guess it don't need nothin' else, but our laws, made for men, force us women to give up our own names and take on a man's—that is, when we let ourselves up to one of 'em. If I was you I wouldn't do it. You've got a nice name, and I wouldn't take on any more. What's your married name?"

"I'm not married."

The woman looked at her surprised, then said in a low voice:

"I know that brides the first day of married life don't like to own up to it. They think nobody spots 'em fur bein' just married. But, laws, any one would know that you two was just married."

Dan, who heard this dialogue, was trying to keep from laughing and was now obliged to swing his chair to face the window, presenting his back to the inquirer. The supposed bride, seeing a number of persons who sat near her enjoying her discomfort, blushed to the roots of her hair and said sternly to her tormentor:

"Madam, you have made a mistake. The gentleman is a stranger to me. I never saw him before he took his chair in this car."

"Oh, land!" exclaimed the Yankee, throwing up her hands. "I've known lots o' lyin' done by brides to hide that they are brides, but I never heard anything like that."

The girl turned to Dan as much as to say, "Help me out of this."

"I regret," he said gallantly, "to confirm the young lady's statement."

A dozen persons sitting near laughed outright.

Dan lost his equanimity, making matters worse. "I'll bet any one here," he said, "that I'm a single man and that I never saw this young lady before today."

He drew forth a fat pocketbook and began to count out ten dollar bills. Not a person interested but thought he was a bridegroom determined to stave off being recognized as such. They laughed all the louder. It was very amusing. Dan looked at the girl, and the girl looked at Dan. He tipped the skirt and said to the others:

"I suppose we'll have to own up. Now for a wedding present."

Taking off his hat, he passed through the car receiving contributions. By this time so many persons had become interested in what was going on that a goodly sum was collected, which Dan poured into the girl's lap.

"If you don't want it," he said, "give it to charity."

"I'll give it to charity," was the sharp reply.

A few minutes later Dan's station was called, and, saying goodby to his bride, he got out of the car, leaving her to pursue her journey alone.

Then the contributors laughed again, but a different laugh from before.

KAISER A PHYSICAL WRECK

KEPT GOING BY DRUGS

German Emperor Considered madman, Even in Germany Pen Picture By Shrewd American.

The German Emperor is a physical wreck, and is constantly under the influence of morphia and cocaine, according to Edgar M. Moore, a real estate dealer of Lafayette, Ind., who returned recently from Germany, and is stopping in New York city. Mr. Moore, because of the story he tells regarding the Kaiser, which he obtained from Otto Helmut, the chauffeur of William II., has asked that his New York address be withheld.
Mr. Moore was in Germany with his wife, an invalid, about three weeks ago,
and says:

KAISER A MADMAN

"The German Emperor is considered to be a madman, even in Germany. He is hopelessly addicted to the use of drugs because of chronic ailments in the throat and ear, which cause constant pain.

The Emperor spends most of his time in the royal palace at Potsdam. He believes the German lost the war in the battle of Jutland, and his most intimate advisers believe that the country must make peace by July. The Emperor's one hope is that the submarine will starve England and that peace overtures will come first from Great Britain. He does not care whether America enters the war, believing it immaterial."

Mr. Moore's passports show that he was permitted to enter Germany via Rotterdam and Simpelveld on the day after Christmas. He went abroad because Mrs.
Moore had an ailment which could be treated successfully only in the baths at Aachen, which is a short distance from the Holland frontier, and because his wife's condition was serious he was allowed to take her there following a recommendation to that effect by a German surgeon attached to the German Consulate in Rotterdam.

CHATS WITH CHAUFFEUR

Mrs. Moore was sent to a sanatorium.
She speaks German like a native, her husband said. After the baths she was placed in a wheel chair, and passed hours on a veranda of the hospital. Next to her on the porch for several days was Helmut, the Kaiser's personal chauffeur for the last eight years. Because of ex-posure Helmut suffered an attack of inflammatory rheumatism, which has rendered him helpless, and on the personal order of the German Emperor the chauffeur was placed in the baths at Aachen.

Helmut did not think for an instant that his wife was other than a German woman, and during the long morning hours that their wheel chairs were side by side he talked freely of his most interesting matter, the German Emperor. Mr.

Moore continued, "He said that the Kaiser is in constant dread of assassination, and for that reason he takes the utmost precautions when travelling.
There are three automobiles in his retinue. First, there is an automobile with four sides in it, a chauffeur and riding with the chauffeur is a soldier with a gun and fixed bayonet. Then comes a huge automobile of the luminous type, and on either side of it, fore and aft, are the Imperial arms. An armed guard sits on the front seat beside the driver, while a wax imitation of the Kaiser in uniform sits in the enclosed portion of the car. The third automobile is a small gray one.
The Kaiser rides in it alone. There is a trunk tied beside the driver, and another strapped on the rear, making it appear that the gray automobile is only a baggage van."

WILHELM A DOPE FiEND

"Helmut said that the road is cleared in advance for the Kaiser's retinue, and that especially while suffering pain the Kaiser drives at a speed exceeding a mile a minute. He also is very irritable when his ear causes pain, and he and his ear and throat physician, who is one of his aides, are constantly quarrelling over the enormous quantities of cocaine and morphine which the imperial patient insists upon every day. The Kaiser carries a hypodermic syringe with him and often 'slips' an injection when his physician is not looking. Helmut said:

"LAST HOPE GONE"

"The chauffeur told my wife of the manner in which the Kaiser received the news of the Jutland defeat. They were driving in the vicinity of Potsdam at the time, and a staff officer in a powerful automobile overtook the Imperial cars, which halted. The Kaiser read a telegram which the staff officer handed to him and his face clouded. 'My God!' he said, 'my last hope is truly gone!' The Emperor believed that the German fleet could destroy the British fleet, and that with her food and munitions problems solved, Prussia could win the war. Hel-

Address and Presentation

On Monday evening, February 26th, about 120 friends and neighbors of Mr.
and Mrs. Murkison Tanner, invaded their home for the purpose of wishing Mr. and Mrs. Tanner and family God speed in their removal to their new home in Silsney Tp. After some time spent in social intercourse, the company were called to order, while Mr. Wm. J. Jeffrey ably filled the chair and an address of appreciation was read by the pastor, Rev. S.
E. Morton, which on behalf of the friends and neighbors expressed in a few apt words the feelings of the community in regard to the loss they will sustain by their removal from our midst. Mrs.
Tanner at the proper time was presented with a leather upholstered rocker; Mr.
Tanner with a writing desk; Mabel with a toilet set and Norman with cuff links.
The address read as follows:—

TO MR. AND MRS. MURKISON TANNER AND FAMILY

We, your friends and neighbors have gathered in your home to-night to say good-bye, before your departure to your new home in Silsney.

We deeply and sincerely regret that you have found it necessary to change your place of residence, and it is to give expression to the sense of loss at your removal from our midst, as well as to give expression of our appreciation of the place you have held among us for so many years, that we have assembled in your home to-night.

We fully realize that you and your family will be greatly missed in church and in every good work associated with the life of this community. In our neighborhood you have always been a friend in every time of need. In sorrow you have sympathized, and in our joys you have rejoiced, and as we think of what you have been to us, we felt we could not let you depart from us without in some slight way, trying to show our appreciation of your kindly services in your clean quiet peaceful lives, which have left an influence upon us that ete-rernity alone can reveal.

We ask you to accept these remembrances as slight tokens of our affection, and, as you look upon them, may you remember, that in the hearts of the friends you are leaving there will ever remain the memory of a good life lived, and at any time you feel like visiting your former neighborhood, there will always be a hearty welcome awaiting you, and we wish you success and happiness in your new home and hope you will always cherish fond recollections of the old friends you left at Harold. Our earnest prayer is that God's abiding presence may be with you until you are called to that home where friends never part.

Signed on behalf of the community,

WM. J. JEFFREY,
ERNEST BROWN.

Mr. Tanner, on behalf of his wife and family, expressed his appreciation of the gifts in a few well-chosen words, wishing everyone a most enjoyable evening, also extending a hearty invitation to visit him in his new home.

Refreshments were then served by the ladies, and the remainder of the evening was spent in music and social intercourse after which all departed to their respective homes.

Increased Production Urged

A call has gone out for increased production in 1917, and townspeople are urged to cultivate every acre of waste land. If everybody who can will do his bit in this way it will help keep down the cost of living and the exercise itself will add to the general health of those who employ their spare hours in cultivating a garden or in raising poultry or in any other way that produces foodstuffs. Look about you now and see if you cannot help others by helping yourself. Self-help is more blessed than self-denial.

Wedding Bells

EGGLETON-MEYERS

On Wednesday, Feb. 28th, at high noon a very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walton H.
Meyers, front of Sidney, when their eldest daughter, Hazel May, became the bride of Richard Wilmut, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Walton Eggleton, second concession of Sidney.

The ceremony was performed by Rev.
G. E. Ross, of Trenton, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends.
Promptly to the strains of wedding bells march, played by Miss Nina Meyers, sister of the bride, the young couple entered the drawing room and took their places beneath the floral bell and arch of evergreens and lilacs.

The bride, who was given away by her father, was handsomely gowned in white silk crepe de chene with nixon, pearl and fur trimmings, with roses entwined in her hair and carrying in her hand a beautiful white testament. She wore the groom's gift, a beautiful brooch with emerald and pearl settings.

After the ceremony the guests repaired to the dining room, where they sat down to a bountiful wedding dinner. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and costly presents.

The happy couple left amid showers of confetti for Bowmanville, Toronto and other western points, the bride travelling in a suit of navy blue serge, with picture hat to match and osprey trimmings. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Eggleton will reside in their new home on the second concession of Sidney. Their many friends join in wishing them a long and happy voyage through life.

National Service Literature

One of the most valuable of recent literary contributions to the great cause is a booklet by Professor Stephen Leacock, entitled "National Organization for War." In this booklet, Dr. Leacock makes an urgent call for national thrift and national saving. He attacks in vigorous style the evils of extravagance at this crisis in Canada's history, and by troubling phrase and apt illustration disposes of various common errors in regard to individual spending of money during war time.

This pamphlet was originally published by Dr. Leacock himself, but the National Service Board were so convinced of its value in connection with their Thrifty Campaign that they have had it re-published and have undertaken its distribution. Copies may be obtained by writing to the Secretary of the National Service Board at Ottawa, or by applying to the National Service Director in any Province.

ANOTHER HALF-MILE GAIN BY BRITISH AT MIRAUMONT

Have Pushed Forward Their Line North of the Ancie at That Place

Huge Results of Gen. Haig's Troops Work In Last Month.

London cable says: Fifteen Young, correspondent of the Daily Mail at British headquarters in France, wires his paper that German howitzers are using ammunition freely in trying to prevent the rapid pursuit of the retreating enemy. He adds that the return of clear, dry weather is favoring the British.

London cable: Again the British have further pushed forward their line to the north of the Ancie, and again apparently without much opposition from the Germans. The latest point of retreat of the Germans, as reported by the London War Office, is north of Miraumont, where over a front of a mile and a half the British advanced an average distance of 600 yards on the morning of the 10th.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

The official communication from British headquarters in France to-night reads:

"During February we captured 2,133 German prisoners, including 36 officers. The following villages were also either captured or surrendered to us with the withdrawal of the Germans: Ligny, Thillois, La Barque, Warlen-court, Pys, Miraumont, Petit Miraumont, Grandcourt, Puisseux-au-Mont, Serre and Gommecourt."

"The enemy continues to yield ground on the Ancie. North of Miraumont our line advanced to-day an average distance of 600 yards on a front of one and a half miles."

"We discharged this morning south of Souchez, followed by a raid in which we took some prisoners. A British raiding party also entered German trenches northeast of Givency, Lens, La Bassée, and captured eight prisoners."

"Under cover of a heavy artillery bombardment, a hostile raiding party succeeded last night in reaching our trenches near Ablaincourt and Ran-court. In both cases the enemy was ejected by our counter-attack. A few men are missing."

"There was considerable mutual artillery activity to-day on the Ypres sector."

Major-General F. B. Maurice, chief director of military operations of the British War Office, said to-day: "The Germans on the western front have made their biggest withdrawal since the battle of the Marne. How far they will retire I cannot say, but they will not retire beyond the point which they are forced to leave either by the economic necessity of saving their losses or from a position which our superior location prevents them from holding."

"The announcement of the British War Office of the withdrawal of the German forces along an eleven-mile front on both sides of the River Ancie in France is admitted by the Berlin War Office for the first time. The ground was 'voluntarily and systematically evacuated and the defence placed in another prepared line,' says Berlin, which adds that the movement 'remained concealed from the enemy.'"

10 VILLAGES, 3,000 PRISONERS.

London cable: In a statement in the House of Commons to-day dealing with recent happenings on the Franco-Belgian front, Henry W. Forster, Financial Secretary of the War Office, said that until the last few days the British operations necessarily had been confined to minor attacks. In these, he said, heavy losses had been inflicted upon the Germans, more than 3,000 prisoners taken and ground of considerable importance gained.

During the past days, continued Mr. Forster, as the result of the continuous pressure on the Ancie front, the enemy had retired on a front of 12 miles to a depth of two miles, giving the British possession of 10 villages and several important positions, including the German hitherto had clung with the utmost determination. Up to the present, the Germans had impressed upon their troops the necessity of defending these positions and fighting to the very last.

"In view of these instructions," the Secretary went on, "this withdrawal cannot but have an unfavorable effect upon the enemy troops and upon the German people — when they know."

"At the same time it is probable the enemy is retreating not merely as a defensive measure, but with the object of saving his strength for a great blow on one or another of the Allied fronts. There is every indication that he will make a supreme effort to end the war in his favor this year, an effort which can only be met by a corresponding determination on the part of Great Britain and her allies."

FOUGHT FROM A TREE TO TREK.

Headquarters of British Army in France cable says: Our men died in July in an attempt to carry Gommecourt. Now they have it and the sacrifice was justified. The famous attack included the historic chateau of Miraumont. The British also is ours, but that had to be carried by stiff street fighting. We are now beyond the town of Gommecourt and the salient also is clear to the north. In the night known as Night of the Wood the men fought each other from tree to tree and the great initiative of the active and crafty north countrymen caused serious losses to the enemy Boche, though he fought well. He also proved inferior in the street fighting in Puisseux. The west stand of the Germans may be along the line running from Miraumont 3,000 yards northeast of Gommecourt, further east the fighting approached the town of Miraumont. On the morning of Tuesday night we got west of Ligny and Thillois and we are now a short distance from the south of the town of Miraumont. With their positions goes much of the flamboyant nonsense in months of German communications. It will be interesting to see what form of explanation the German higher command takes when at last forced to admit that the German troops are withdrawing before the British. The retreat is being covered by small parties of men and a few machine guns. Such a putting west of the line is a fairly good one, but it is undoubtedly chosen. They are of the well-known stout character and are furnished with about a week's provisions and told to die where they are left. The roads are fairly good. The enemy is burning all dugouts and destroying any buildings which their anxiety tells them may be of use to us. The enemy has mined the road at junctions, and has left many simple aboos. So far there has been very few accidents. Our town troops are taking the matter as part of the day's work and think it better than trench fighting. They are brisk and cheerful in the prospect of going into a new country and hunting down the enemy in the open.

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris cable says: The official communication issued by the War Office Thursday reads:

"A surprise attack on a German trench in the region of Tahure enabled us to bring back prisoners. An artillery action occurred on the front of Les Chambres-Reconvaux. The day was calm on the rest of the front."

FRUIT DISEASE AND TREATMENT

Niagara Growers Hear Advice From Experts.

Should Produce What the Buyers Want.

St. Catharines cable says: Mr. G. O. Madden, B.S.A., of the Dominion Botanical Department, was the first speaker at this morning's meeting of the Niagara Fruit Growers here, and his subject "Some Ordinary Fruit Diseases," was treated from the standpoint of the practical grower. He gave various reasons for the removal of mummified fruits that sometimes remain on trees after harvest. These he said carry disease which is transferred to the twigs, and later to the fruit of the succeeding season. This trouble being especially noticeable in the case of brown rot-patches. Discussion following this address brought forth the information that spraying does not take the place of destruction of this mummified fruit.

Mr. Madden called attention to the fact that the membership of the association has fallen off somewhat during the past year. He asked for a display of greater enthusiasm on the part of the fruit growers, to be shown by the raising in of subscription.

In addition to remarks on the spraying of orchards, Mr. Madden devoted a part of his time to a description of the appearance of several of the insects which are found on fruit, including the grape leaf hopper, the adult of which species drops and flies away when the vine is shaken. This insect attacks the Roger grape particularly and is especially prevalent in vineyards situated near dry land, in which the insect breeds. Tobacco extract was recommended for destroying this pest, the liquid to be applied as a spray under considerable power. A nozzle set at a small angle to the spray rod should be used so that the spray will reach the under side of the leaves.

"I expect the largest crop of apples that has ever occurred in the Niagara district this year, and this will be largely due to the good crop that was taken of the orchards last year," said Mr. Madden.

He called attention to a spraying device of great value to the orchardist in the angle nozzle, which allows the workmen to drop from the middle of the foliage and spray the leaves.

Two cents, a tree of clean cherries can be had by spraying with arsenate of lead at the time when Richmond cherries are just beginning to show red. The fruit cherry cherries can be controlled by means of this work, but has been found unnecessary.

All other districts are more or less troubled with pear blight, an account of Prof. Madden's experience in this line, which have been most successful at a small cost proved very interesting. The blight, he said, must be cut before the growth of the wood starts, and the orchard should be gone over again in the spring. All cuttings must be burned so as to destroy the fungus.

The marketing and marketing of vegetables was divided by Mr. Madden into several classes, including the absolute vegetable grower, who raises all classes of vegetables extensively for city supply; the specialist in one crop on a large scale, and the farmer who grows a few vegetables on a side line. The latter grower, he said, should first consider his market and then give much attention to the building up of his soil, as in the case of the specialist. For his part Mr. Madden was from 50 to 60 tons of manure to the acre on his land.

He advised the drawing of manure in the winter, but in answer to a question as to the advisability of spreading it on the land at that time, he advised against it in the case of land that is to be used very early in the spring, or in case the land is heavily covered with snow. The use of quick maturing varieties of vegetables he recommended as worth considering in the Niagara district with a view of obtaining two crops in one season. In discussing the subject of the consumer, he said: do not try to make the buyer take what you like yourself. Mr. Madden advised the staking of tomato plants and pruning to a single stem for the production of first-class tomatoes, to supply the best trade.

The afternoon session was opened by Mr. Hamilton Fleming, president of the association. In discussing the labor problem and giving an idea of sources from which help might be expected in the coming season, Mr. P. W. Hodgetts said that parents would be justified in taking their children out of school this year so as to provide for the raising and harvesting of the crops.

Dr. G. C. Creelman agreed that fruit growers did not get the price they should for their product. He admitted the big investment in land and outfit made by the grower, which does not bring a fair return.

In analyzing the conditions of country life, which back town and country dwellers consider unsatisfactory, Dr. Creelman pointed out that what is most needed is a wider outlook for the average farmer, and a better chance for the farmer's boy to enjoy himself. To the farmers, he said, take the boy into partnership early in his life, so that he will stay on the farm because he wishes to and not because he must.

"Proper fertilization of soil was Prof. R. Harcourt's address, and his note of warning against the use of useless materials sold as fertilizers was heard with some wonder by many who had been parting with their money for stuff that did nothing but add a little bulk to the soil."

SAW NO SUBS.

U. S. Freighter Had Un- eventful Trip.

Pariseable says: The American freighter Rochester has been greeted at Bordeaux with the same enthusiasm as was shown in the case of the Orleans, according to a Bordeaux despatch to the Havas Agency. Captain A. Korowitz, in an interview, said in regard to his trip:

"We left New York two hours after the Orleans. The voyage was not marked by any incident except for a severe storm which we ran into. I saw no submarines, but thought it prudent to steam with lights out for four nights. We entered the danger zone on Monday evening, but saw nothing from then until we reached the Gironde, except one sailing ship. After all, it was not so very difficult to force the blockade and arrive safely."

GRANTS TO ROADS

To be Part of Provincial System.

A Toronto despatch: Amendments that will link up existing highway laws with the provincial highway system legislation, to be introduced later in the session, was brought down in the House by Hon. Philip Macdaniel yesterday. The most important feature of the new legislation is a clause giving the Government power to designate a provincial road and to contribute a grant of sixty per cent. of the cost of construction. This would mean an addition of twenty per cent. upon the present grant, in exchange for the road and some other measure of provincial control. These roads would draw the traffic from ordinary county and town ship roads and carry it to the big provincial highways.

Another amendment gives the Government power, in proceeding with the construction of a provincial highway, to construct within the boundaries of urban municipalities, or to give grants to the municipalities toward construction. Both amendments are related to the proposed provincial system, but are more conveniently fitted into existing statutes.

J. H. Ham, of South Brant, introduced a bill to give cities the right to tax land at a higher rate than improvements. J. T. Keen, of South Wentworth, introduced a municipal act amendment, providing for a township assessment commissioner for Barton Township.

New Cloths.

They are for feminine spring coats. And quite new and pleasing, all of them. Argentina cloth is one of these—it resembles Bolivia but has a jersey back. It comes in a very rich color and is 60 inches wide. Very good for suits and coats is a Buenos cloth which has a soft velvet comes in a home-spun weave. This cloth is a mixture of wool and silk and is even wider than the Argentina. And, of course, there are new Bolivians with a variety of colors and colors. Grandma had a very bad cold one day when a visit. She granddaughters very hard. Much pleased with the unexpected excitement, the child looked up and said: "Honk again, grandma."—The Christian Herald.

BERNSTORFF KNOWS NOW SEAS' RULER

British Navy's Readiness and Control Was Never Better Shown.

WORLD ROVERS

In Canadian Troops Waiting to Go Across—Show Why Huns Will Lose.

Halifax despatch: Count Johann Von Bernstorff has had occasion recently to contrast British and German methods of Emirate building. When the Count and his retinue passed up the harbor of Halifax in the Frederick VIII, to the land-locked inner anchorage known as Bedford Basin, there to be subjected to a careful search for dangerous documents or contraband articles, they sailed within pistol shot of a huge transport laden with Canadians on their way to the front. Von Bernstorff and his staff, in the darkness of the night, saw nothing of the transport or of the vessels of war that lie near by. But the Count knew that in the East of the Atlantic was open to him while Canadian fighting men went without let or hindrance, guarded as they have been since the first day of the war, that have safely piloted every transport on the Atlantic route.

Why had Bernstorff to submit to the indignity of detention by the representatives of British sea power when the British East of the Atlantic German undersea Britain's soldiers can pass in safety? The obvious answer is that the German navy is not a match for that of the United Kingdom, and therefore must be kept under the surface, however desperately it may strive for mastery beneath. The British navy was ready. By its preparedness the war was won before a shot was fired. Without the British navy to keep the seas Germany would have had victory speedy and complete.

Why was the British navy ready amid a thousand unreadinesses ashore? Because it mirrored the national genius and typified the British love of adventure. For centuries the Islander has voyaged to far lands. For him there is no long and arduous land journey. He would rather master his secrets, bought and sold his wares, and colonized his empty spaces.

Centuries of struggle with Nature on land and sea, and with men in every quarter of the earth, has given the British an inheritance of racial and individual self-confidence all the more remarkable because it is often concealed beneath a heavy crust of reserve and surface self-deprecation. Probe beneath the crust and in the milk of the United Kingdom the overseas dominions among the uneducated as well as among the cultured, one finds the pride of race and consciousness of high ancestry that must have animated the Greek and the Roman in the days of their greatness. It is this pride of race that has given the British half years of a tremendous conflict sends men eagerly into the very heart of the inferno "to do their bit."

The matter-of-fact talk of the officers and men en route to the front might lead the casual hearer to suspect lack of imagination or of heroism, but to those who are ahead. A gunner beside a big weapon, or a mounted soldier, quotes from King'sley's "Westward Ho!" He is a Londoner by birth, but knows and loves Devon and her heroes. If a submarine should find his path he will fight as Drake's men fought, three centuries ago against all the defilements of Spain.

Here is another type. He is a young Canadian, born in Edmonton of English parents. He never saw the sea until his generation. He never saw a bigger ship than the little river steamer that ply on the Saskatchewan. Yet he comes aboard without the slightest perturbation. The salt sea air, the great ship, the heaving water, are his racial inheritance. It is his generation with the plains to make landmen of his breed and create in his descendants a distrust of the sea.

To many of the men of the western rearmaments on board the world is very small. It is a story of Shanghai. Another talks with intimate knowledge of the Kaffir problem in South Africa, whither he went in 1899 to fight the Boers, and where he lived long enough to respect them. Spots and dashes are known figures to him. Something turns the conversation to navigation, and descriptions of ports in many lands are available. The man who knows all about the Straits of Magellan. Another talks with the boatman from the Peace River. The rancher who got 128 bushels of oats per acre from his of Alberta holding, and secured sixty cents a bushel, gives a short dissertation on the absolute necessity of wheat to desert their holdings and their cattle when the Empire needs meat so badly. Lots of them, he says, turned their live stock over to the buyer at any price, and left their places unoccupied.

I had not suspected him of such speculation, but he, too, made a valuable contribution to the mental movie entertainment. He had gone to France two years ago with a very poor opinion of Englishmen. They he fancied, early, uncompanionable and lacked adaptation to Canadian conditions. "I found out," he said, "that the English officer is the finest gentleman I have ever met, a model of courtesy, and as brave as he is as he is courteous."

There are a lot of people making discoveries as this young Canadian Englishman in the great feeling time of war. German patience, their individuality and subordination in peace and war, but was not in doubt that in the final trial of strength the individualistic, adventurous, Britons, whose great ambition it is to live their own life in their own way, will emerge victorious.

His humor will help mightily. It emerges in a ready way. To-day a company of leather-faced Westerners, who had been a week on trains, were paraded on the deck. "Abe we don't want no more of this," shouted one. The answer was the usual thunderous "No."

Then the company was looked along the line. "Are we ugly?" he yelled. Every man looked at his neighbor as a perfect case of laughter swept the ranks. "Those fellows will go into a battle as if it were a championship hockey game. Stewart Lyon."

U. S. HOUSE IS ALMOST UNIT WITH WILSON

Only 13 of 416 Opposed Bill to Arm United States Ships.

ONE CLAUSE OFF

But "Other Instrumental- ties" Come Up in the Senate To-day.

Berlin cable: The tension of the last 48 hours eased a bit this morning on the receipt of advice that Washington was not contemplating precipitate action in regard to the sinking of the Laconia. Official circles, the press and the public continue to manifest calm indifference as to future developments. The press reiterates that Germany has spoken the final word in regard to submarine warfare, and that the Rubicon has been crossed.

Washington, March 1.—Aroused by the disclosures of Germany's plot to unite Japan and Mexico with her in a war upon the United States, and then convinced by official evidence of its authenticity, Congress to-day abandoned the delays and objections which have checked President Wilson's efforts to be clothed with express authority to deal with the submarine menace.

The House after a ten-hour debate and by an overwhelming majority passed a bill to empower the President to arm merchant ships and providing for a hundred-million dollar bond issue. This bill, however, does not contain the grant of authority to arm merchant ships, which the President specifically desires, and would prevent Government war in insurance for munition ships, a prohibition which the President does not approve.

When the House bill is received in the Senate to-morrow the Senate bill, which the administration fully commends, will be substituted, and it is expected to be finally accepted by both Houses as the law.

Official announcement was made at the White House to-day that the Administration stands behind the Senate bill, and that the President will support it. In the Senate an attempt to ask the President to disclose the Government's source of information of the attempted intrigue with Mexico and Japan, on the supposition that the President would not do so, was defeated after a sharp and sensational debate. Instead, the Senate merely asked for official notice of the authenticity of the despatch of Minister Zimmermann to German Minister von Eckhardt in Mexico City. The President transmitted it immediately with the statement that it would not be compatible with the public interests to reveal further details concerning it.

Congressmen clashed with the so-called pacifist group in the House who have been opposing a grant of authority to the President on the ground that it would be a step toward war, and that they did not vote for an armaments bill in the belief that to arm the President to protect American rights might be the way to avoid war.

Republican senators who have been filibustering against the armaments bill, not being opposed to it, but to force an extra session of Congress, declared their conviction that the situation demanded united support of the President.

NO MORE "PLAYING POLITICS."

A Congress badly divided, and in its dying moments, with its legislative programme at a standstill, suddenly took on a new aspect. It was as if the cry "America first!" had rung through the halls of both Houses, and the response has been almost instantaneous. In the Senate members who have opposed the President in his manner of dealing with Germany, on the ground that it was leading to war, were found fighting influences which were calculated to embarrass him. There were bitter references in debate to every whom the President would be expected to look for advice on foreign affairs. Chairman Stone of the Foreign Relations Committee was voted down in his own committee on his own draft of a resolution asking the President to disclose if the American Government's information concerning the latest plan of German intrigue came from one of Germany's enemies.

TOKIO REJECTED IDEA.

The evidence at hand are that if Mexico, as Germany suggested, communicated to Japan the proposal for an attack on the United States, it met with a reception at Tokio which was quite contrary to what Berlin had expected.

JAPANESE STATEMENT.

Lansing flatly refused to give any indication of how the information came into possession of the United States Government, on the ground that it would endanger the lives of those concerned.

The Japanese Embassy made the following comment: "With regard to the alleged German attempt to induce Japan and Mexico to make a united attack on the United States, made public in the morning, the Japanese Embassy, while lacking information as to whether such invitation ever reached Tokio, desires to state most emphatically that in no circumstances, be entertained by the Japanese Government, which in entire accord and close relations with the other powers, on account of formal agreements and our common cause, and, moreover, our friendship with the United States, which is every day growing in sincerity and cordiality."

CREATED SENSATION IN LONDON.

London cable says: The time is long since past when any news of the German policy is calculated to astonish the British public, but the revelation of the plot to induce Mexico and Japan to attack the United States provided this country with a first class sensation to-day.

The Associated Press Washington despatch gave the late afternoon papers the first news, which was displayed under startling headlines, such as: "Great Hun plot unmasked." "Most sensational plot of the war." "Amazing revelation of German duplicity."

The edition of the papers was early exhausted. The immediate idea of the man in the street was here at last was an undoubted cause belli for the United States, the only matter for curiosity appearing to be how soon an actual declaration of war might be expected. The news was met for editorial comment in the afternoon papers, and the Government officials approached declined at the present juncture to make any statement for publication.

Perhaps next to the effect of the news in America, the attitude of Japan excited the public and most. Nowhere, however, did the idea prevail for a moment that Japan could be detached from the Entente alliance. Altogether, while the greatest confidence is felt that such an intrigue could only recoil on its authors, the British public is watching with great interest further details and developments.

NEW HUN SUBS. 350 FEET LONG

Carry 20 Torpedoes and Crew of 32 Men.

Five Victims Yesterday—U. S. Seamen Missing.

Amsterdam cable: The Telegraf publishes an account of an interview with a German soldier who has been for some time serving as a clerk at the Vulkan dock-yard in Hamburg. To avoid punishment for some trivial offence he escaped across the frontier. The man left Hamburg in February. There were then in the Vulkan dock-yard eight large submarines on the stocks. These latest submarines are nearly 350 feet long, and are armed like a small cruiser. They can take 20 torpedoes and a crew of 32. Gangs of 120 men are at work day and night on each submarine. The completion of a submarine requires three months. Besides the submarines, small cruisers are now being built at the Vulkan dock-yard of a new class, so-called the Stadt class. These are 420 feet long.

FIVE SHIP VICTIMS.

London cable: The reports of the past 24 hours show five additional ships of an aggregate tonnage of 7,367 have been sunk.

The following are the ships reported sunk: Heteric Williams, British sailing ship, 17 tons; Belgian fishing boat; Clair Perquaire, British steamship, 5,867 tons gross, Feb. 26; Marie Joseph, French schooner, of 192 tons, on Feb. 28; Sjostad, Norwegian steamship, 1,155 tons, on Feb. 28.

SINKING OF GARGALM CASTLE.

Quebec cable: The British barque Gargalm Castle has been sunk by a German submarine. The ship's crew include two Americans, Harry Merritt, of Beaver Falls, Pa., and Harry Richardson, of Boston, Mass. They were 13 hours in the boats.

Captain Frampton, of the Gargalm Castle, his wife and 12 of the crew passed survivors on the first boat. They had been landed at a western port.

The Gargalm Castle was shelled and sunk Tuesday evening by a submarine which started firing at a mile and a half range, and continued until two boats got away from the ship.

Harry Merritt, one of the American survivors on the first boat, said that a second boat was last sight of during the night, and probably was swamped, as bad weather prevailed.

The missing boat contained the chief and third officers and ten men, including two Americans, one a deck officer, ordinary seaman, and David Walker, cook.

The sinking of the Gargalm Castle was previously reported from Paris (March 1).

Address and Presentation

On Saturday evening, March 3rd, about 70 friends and neighbors of Mr. Pleasant community, met at the home of Mr. John Johnson, in honor of his son, William, who has enlisted in the 234th Battalion, for overseas service.

After the company was called to order, the Rev. Mr. Thomas Montgomery, very efficiently discharged the duties of chairman.

The following address was read by Miss Alex. Board, the presentation being made by Mrs. James Linn.

DEAR FRIENDS:—
You are clad in khaki to-night because you have heard and nobly responded to the call of King and Country. You are therefore a soldier of the King and are going from us. Not for the love of battle, nor the lust of conquest, but for the cause of honor, the maintaining of a solemn pledge and the upholding of the principles of true liberty. Perhaps the situation could not be better set forth, than in the heart stirring words of our noble King, who at the outbreak of this terrible war, declared his attitude as follows: "Had I stood aside, when in defiance of pledges to which my Kingdom was a party, the goil of Belgium was violated and her cities laid desolate, when the very life of the French nation was threatened with extinction, I should have sacrificed my honor, and given to destruction the liberties of my Empire and of mankind."

You are therefore standing shoulder to shoulder with our noble King, in support of the great cause and are in truth moving toward the altar of the world's greatest need. While we earnestly hope that the supreme sacrifice may not be required of you, yet we clearly discern within you the spirit of the men of by-gone, but never to be forgotten days, when the cause of freedom and liberty found willing and brave defenders. The spirit of the men of Agincourt, Trafalgar and Waterloo, lives again in the hearts of Britain's sons. To-night, we find that you are of the rank and file of the heroic sons of our Dominion, who for many long months have been standing upon a far off field as living shields for our homes, our liberties and our beloved institutions, and whose unceasing battle cry shall long outlive the roll of musketry and the roar of cannon. "Give us liberty or we die." And now as you thus go from our midst, we beg that you kindly accept this wrist watch in token of the ties, tender and strong, that shall ever bind you to our hearts, and that shall miss you in the Sabbath school and in the public service of the sanctuary, but your vacant place shall ever prompt the prayer, that you may ever be so divinely guided, sustained and kept, in body, soul and spirit, that whether in life or in death, you may be the Lord's.

Private Johnson in his manly reply, said he had felt the call strongly, and was glad of the privilege to do his bit. Several others made short patriotic speeches, commending the stand he had taken for freedom's cause.

The evening concluded with a social hour, during which lunch was served.

Letter of Condolence

Kaiser a Maniac

mouth said that his royal master had never been the same since receiving that news.

ROADS CLEARED FOR KAISER
Helmuth heard many things, because frequently officers would discuss matters with the Kaiser while they stood beside his automobile. The Emperor did not do very much of the actual directing of the campaign, and consultations with him are largely perfunctory. The one thing he insisted on was that proper etiquette shall be shown him at all times. If he desired to go from Potsdam to Frankfurt by motor, Helmuth said, the road would be cleared for him. But en route he might change his mind and stop in some village. If the burgomaster is not there to greet him he is to be offended, and therefore, all village officials and all troops en route are kept waiting and the soldiers at attention until the royal cortege passes. The Emperor is gradually growing weaker physically. An internal sore above his ear is the cause of his trouble, and when the sore is open he gets relief; but if it closes he suffers tortures, takes drugs and often acts like an insane man. He finds some satisfaction in speeding when in pain and often will drive all night rather than lie sleepless in the palace.

"Late he has been practically confined to Potsdam. Helmuth said reports are frequently given out on the western front that the Kaiser is on the eastern front and vice versa. Just for the purpose of keeping up the spirits of the men. His chauffeur said that he was in the Champagne district of France more than eighteen months ago, and that since then he has not seen a battlefield except on one trip to Austria."

The Kaiser is pitted in Germany by the people, according to Mr. Moore. They do not believe he started the war; they lay the blame for the most part on the Deutsches Bank and on financiers and men with large shipping interests.

THE GOOD QUESTION
"Much of my time was idle in Aachen" Mr. Moore continued. "I speak German and spent some time in motion picture houses and in public houses, where I talked with many soldiers. One was a Cincinnati German-American. They believe they are defeated and are most eager for peace. Reports have it that the civilian population is starving so that the soldiers may have full stomachs, but they are not true. This German-American told me that seven months ago the ration was cut exactly in half. I stopped at a hotel which cost me $5 a day, and here is the menu I had every day:

"Breakfast two small pieces of dark bread made of wood pulp and Kaiser-kaffee, or coffee, made of acorns and oats. Luncheon consisted of a small apple, a glass of dunkle beer (beer without malt or hops in it), pancake made out of a chemically prepared flour with no wheat in it, and at dinner I had two small potatoes, a small dish of spinach, and once I had a small orange for dessert by paying a mark extra for it. There is no bread allowed in a German home except for the one meal—breakfast—and that isn't really bread."

HINDENBURG BLAMED
Mr. Moore also said that Von Hindenburg is no longer a national hero.

"The women hate him," he said, "and call him the butcher. They have discovered that he has uselessly sacrificed the lives of thousands of men by his methods of fighting. The victories he won have all been dear in human blood. The campaign into Roumania was undertaken for the sole purpose of getting food. They knew that Roumania was a great granary, but when the German troops arrived there they found the grain either had been destroyed or that oil had been poured on it. All the oil-soaked grain was sent back to Germany, where an attempt was made to feed the hogs with it, but the hogs wouldn't eat it; then it was cleaned and the oil used, but the grain was hopelessly ruined."

Mr. Moore was in Düsseldorf one day when there was a food riot. More than one thousand women went to the burgomaster and demanded food.

"He told them in an address that he had no food," said Mr. Moore, "that victory was in sight and that further sacrifices must be made. One woman, acting as spokesman, shouted that they had given the lives of their sons, brothers and fathers and were themselves starving. The burgomaster ordered them to disband threatening to call the troops. The leading woman laughed and said they all wanted to be shot. The troops were ordered out—three companies of infantry. They were not strong enough to force the women from the square, so they were ordered to shoot into the crowd. This they refused to do."

SAVING THE MEN
"At the beginning of the war refusal to obey such a military order meant death but Germany has learned to conserve her men where she can. Instead of shooting these men who refused to murder their own wives, sisters and mothers, they were punished by being sent at once into the trenches of Russia, near Riga. Soldiers told me that that meant almost certain death, either from bullets or from pneumonia or freezing to death. The thermometer in those trenches stays thirty and forty degrees below zero week in and week out this time of the year. The leaving of those troops for the Russian front next day was one of the most pathetic sights I ever saw."

Mrs. Moore was treated in Aachen by Dr. van Rey, who is in charge of thirty-eight military hospitals there. These hospitals are all filled with wounded. In one there are 3,000 men blind, while in another there are 4,000 men who were driven in one by shell fire. Mr. Moore said, On January 18 last medical inspectors went through the other hospitals. Any man who could stand after being patched up was sent again to the trenches.

"My wife's physician was very anxious to get some real news of how the outside world regarded the war," he said. "He told me that he knew the glowing accounts of victories, etc., and of revolts in India and Ireland were fiction and he wanted the truth. I told him I was a stranger in a strange land and that I didn't care to talk. After he promised that 'what I said shouldn't be used against me' I told him a few things that made his eyes open. Then he told me some things, one of which was that Germany did not care whether America got in the war or not. The physician said that the indemnity that America could claim would be so small as to be unworthy of consideration. He also told me that the war party was playing its last card with the submarines and he was positive that England could be starved."

THE LAST KAISER

"I believe that when the German people realize that they cannot starve England by sinking ships they will demand of the ruling classes that the war shall cease. While I did not hear it openly, there were covert hints that the present might be the last Kaiser, and it wouldn't surprise me if Germany, after the war, became a republic. The Crown Prince isn't at all popular with the people because of his militaristic and autocratic spirit."

Recruits Wanted
for Production

Just as surely as lack of food is strangling Germany day by day, so plenty of food is winning the victory for the allies. The French armies, for instance, were never better fed than now, for France cannot forget the awful lesson of 1870—the failure of her food supply. To this she attributed the loss of that war.

To feed the French soldiers around Verdun, more than 25,500,000 pounds of food a week were required. This gives a faint idea of the colossal task of feeding an army. Canada and Britain have a huge army of fighting heroes on the line; every man must have plenty of food, in spite of a world shortage. Upon Canada's food production all principally rely.

The Farmers of Ontario
Urgently Need Help

The Department of Agriculture appeals to men and boys to enlist in the farm help campaign. The Department appeals to men unfit for military service, or who find it impossible to enlist in the army. Do your "bit" by helping to increase production of foodstuffs. This is your hour of opportunity.

The farmers of Ontario need the help of retired farmers, of men following no occupation (retired), of business men who can spare a portion of their time. We appeal to all who can so arrange their ordinary affairs to plan to help some farmer friend, particularly in seed time and harvest.

Mosaic Disease of Tomatoes

The Mosaic disease is seen in tomato leaves when the plants are about a foot high or later. It is not a leaf spot or blight, but consists of a general unhealthy condition of the leaves, indicated by light or yellowish-green areas with dark green, normal areas between. Since the lighter parts are not so vigorous, the normal, healthy areas often grow faster, thus producing an irregular or blotchy effect. Diseased plants are weaker than healthy plants and set less fruit.

This is not a serious disease generally, but it is prevalent enough in a number of cases each year, and sometimes causes considerable damage. In the Niagara district the general field crop has been examined in 1915 and 1916, and the percentage of diseased plants ascertained. The results are given below:

	1915	1916
No. of fields examined.....	26	27
No. of fields diseased.....	10	7
No. of plants examined.....	5583	9300
No. of plants diseased.....	128	277
Percentage of disease.....	2.3	3.4
Largest percentage of diseased found.....	55.55	47.00

It is apparent from the above table that while the total amount of disease is small, it may be quite large in individual cases.

During 1915 the Director of the Vine-land Horticultural Experiment Station kindly undertook to ascertain the number and weight of the fruits from equal numbers of healthy and diseased plants. His figures are appended:

	59 healthy plants	59 diseased plants
No. of fruits.....	7135	4740
Wt. of fruits.....	819 1/2 lb.	539 lb.
Increase of healthy over mosaic plants in no. of fruits.....	36.8%	Increase of healthy over mosaic plant in wt. of fruits..... 40.5%

It will readily be seen that these figures indicate a pronounced decrease in crop due to the disease, since, in the field in question, only a slight difference could be observed by us before the actual counting and weighing was done, it is highly probable that growers are apt to suffer a great deal more than they suspect by the presence of this disease.

The disease appears to pass the winter in two ways: (1), in the field, in the soil or in old plant remains; (2), in the seed bed. The first does not seem to be of serious importance; but it is not advisable to grow tomatoes on land where the mosaic disease has been bad during the previous year. Seed bed infection, on the other hand, seems to be responsible for all the bad cases of the disease yet seen. The common practice of adding new soil to that of the old tomato seed bed is what causes the trouble, since the disease germs still linger in the old soil. Danger from this cause can readily be avoided by completely changing the seed bed soil as soon as the disease appears in the field. This discarded soil is apparently harmless for other plants.

A more extended account of this disease has been given in the Central Experimental Farm Reports of 1915 and 1916.

Letter of Condolence

Salem, March 5th, '17

Dear Mr. Robinson,
We, the ladies of the W.M.S., desire to convey to you our deepest sympathy in the hour of your great trial. During the years that we have been associated in missionary work we have learned to feel kindly toward each other. This hour of bereavement has more firmly united us. We feel something of your loss and sorrow with you to-day. The memory of Mr. Robinson's life remains with us. It gives us comfort when we think of his kindly patient spirit, we are assured that our lives are richer because he lived, and will try to cherish and reproduce the treasure which has been left with us. We are conscious that there are feelings which cannot wholly be assuaged. They are inexpressible motions. In these we seek solace in prayer and pray that the grace of our common Father, may be very consciously yours.

Signed on behalf of the ladies of Salem Auxiliary.

New Bridge

The new town line bridge connecting the mainland with Anderson's Island is nearing completion. As there has never been a bridge there it meant a distance of several miles for farmers owning land on the island, as they had to drive 4 or 5 in order to cross, which was a great inconvenience.

The bridge is of iron and was purchased in Bridgewater, and cost in the neighborhood of $500.

It is being built by land owners who have interests on the island. Messrs. Huffman, of Trenton, and Jas. Conley, of Stirling, are doing the work.

Escaped Lunatic's Bitter Experience

In his stocking feet and without an overcoat, carrying his boots in his hand, and suffering terribly from the cold, Hector Robillard, aged 30, a patient who made his escape from one of the insane asylums at Brockville, walked into the police station at Kingston, early Monday morning for protection. He said he had walked part of the fifty miles, and had ridden the rest of the way on a freight train.

The Cheese Trade

The Canadian cheese trade is virtually over for the present season, and dealers are beginning to look forward to the new make of April cheese, and it is understood that buyers are willing to pay 24 cents to 25 cents for the April make, but that farmers will not sell. What cheese are being dealt in now for export, are American which have cost from 25 cents to 26 cents, and are being shipped from New York and Boston, and also from Canadian ports. There appears to be a dearth of cheese in England at the present time, and prices there continue to rule very high. A few new milk fodder cheese are expected this month. The price of March cheese last year started at 17 cents and that price was bid for the April make. As long as the war lasts the price of cheese cannot be expected to rule much lower, as it is consumed so extensively by the army. An exporter stated this week that he was advised by his English correspondent that he would be open for orders on the first lots of new cheese, and to keep him posted.—Frank Bellin.

Support the War Loan

The Dominion's new war loan will test the determination of the Canadian people to see the war through to the end. If this loan is as successful as its predecessors notice will be served upon the world, and particularly upon Germany, that there is no wavering of purpose among Canadians to fight on until democracy has been vindicated and autocracy crushed.

We have reached the supreme crisis of the war. Within the next few months the Allied people will be called upon to make sacrifices in treasure and in blood greater than any that have yet been known. Upon the shell-ravaged fields of Europe our brave soldiers face the future with fortitude and unyielding devotion. Can we here at home have said that our determination faltered at the critical hour, that we failed to support them in the supreme moment of crisis? Beyond the sea we have recently seen the people of the old Motherland, bearing upon their shoulders the Titanic burden of unprecedented financial losses, respond to a further call for sacrifice in a manner that amazed the world. This war, it cannot be too often said, is ours as much as theirs, we cannot be true to our professions, we cannot be true to our soldiers who have died, and do less than they have done. Let the people of Canada, then, unite in making this new demand upon their financial resources an occasion for impressing the world anew with the fact that this Dominion proposes in the historic words of Mr. Asquith, to fight on to the "last ounce of its treasure, the last drop of its blood."

The Submarine Menace

The fact that tramp steamers are now willing to take cargoes to British ports that of late refused, is said to be due to the danger from submarines having been greatly lessened. It seems that the small and speedy gun boats or "chasers" carrying powerful cannon, are playing havoc with Germany's fleet of submarines. Amongst the rough treatment to which German submarines have been subjected, a captain of a British chaser furnishes the details. He stated that his little craft with guns hidden, was signalled to stop. The order was, of course, obeyed, and the submarine approached, when its captain shouted to a man standing on the chaser, are you the captain of this boat? I am, came the reply. Then said the captain of the submarine, I will give you and your men three minutes to leave your boat before I sink her." Then came the prompt response from the chaser's captain, "I will give you and your crew three seconds to leave your boat before I sink her." Instantly, the thin covering fell from the chaser's side, revealing the months of two gaping guns, which spoke in awful accents in quick succession ripped open the submarine's side below the water line and sent her to the bottom without the chance of saving a life.

Grand Secretary I.O.O.F. Visits Marmora and Spring Brook

Friday of last week, March 9th, 1917, was an eventful date in the history of Spring Brook Lodge, I.O.O.F., No. 429, when Mr. Wm. Brooks, Grand Secretary of Toronto, completed the merger of Spring Brook Lodge with Mystic Lodge, No. 378 of Marmora.

Mystic Lodge was for some years very successful, having on its roll a number of the best citizens of Marmora and being until the present time in a flourishing condition financially. Owing to the fact that many members moved away and others being out of town, the lodge eventually became less active and was of late not meeting regularly at all. It was in the interests of both lodges that a merger should be arranged, and after Mr. Wm. Brooks, Grand Sec'y, and Mr. G. W. Shortt, D.D.G.M. for this District, had completed all arrangements at Marmora, the night of merger was set for March 9th, 1917.

The business part of the program was soon closed up to the satisfaction of everyone, and all the members betook themselves to the lower part of the hall where the ladies had prepared a sumptuous repast. The tables looked very inviting and when the oyster stew was brought on nothing more was to be desired. After the toast to "The King" had been heartily responded to by all singing "God Save the King," the toastmaster proposed the toast of "The Ladies," which was responded to by Mr. H. R. Pearce, of Marmora, who gave a very interesting reply. Mr. G. W. Shortt, proposed the toast to "The Grand Lodge of Ontario," and Mr. Wm. Brooks the Grand Sec'y replied. The address of Mr. Brooks was a splendid outline of the origin of the Order and some of the things the Order is doing to-day. Special mention was made of the part the ladies are taking in the Order as Rebekahs, and of the great work they are doing in connection with the relief of suffering caused by the war.

The members present from Marmora were called on for a few remarks and replied briefly.

A toast was proposed to "The Boys at the Front." At the suggestion of the Grand Secretary this was responded to by three hearty cheers.

After again singing a verse of the national anthem the assembly dispersed, having spent a most instructive and enjoyable evening.

Letter to Paul Hagerman

The following letter has been received by Mr. Paul Hagerman, from Pt. J. H. Robbins, who is a Prisoner of War.

Munster, Jan., 14th, 1917.
Pte. J. H. Robbins, Regt. No. 486, 30th Winnipeg Rifles, 8th Batt., 1st Canadian Conty., British Prisoner of War, Gefangener Lager 2, Munster in Westphalia, Germany Cowee 3.

Dear Mother and Father:—
Well I guess you will be thinking that it is time I wrote you my dream and let you know how I am getting along. I am in very good health at the present and hope I can keep that way and how you all at home hope you are all fine and thriving well. It is a long time since I had a letter from you and it is the same with you concerning me.

Well I wonder if this war will ever end and if I will ever see your dear faces again. I have not been a prisoner as long as some boys have, but I have been one long enough to have nearly lost all courage and hope of ever building a future or seeing one, if I could only see you all again I would give my life away. Well this is a very bright letter, is it? But what could you expect from one in my circumstances over 20 months now. When you get this letter will you answer it right away and give us a word and a hope to cheer us up. I know that everybody is thinking of us and praying for us, and praying for the time when we'll all meet again in the Garden of Eve.—Canada

Well Mother I was very sorry to hear that Ada had gone away, but I guessed she was influenced the same as myself, but she has not put you out of her life though, has she? She could not let you have brought her up and myself too. I know I will never forget you, if I ever get a chance to repay, Well Mother, don't forget me and if you can send anything in the way of food stuffs send it along.

Remember me in your daily prayers, and give my best respects to all my friends at Salem. I remain,
Your ever faithful boy,
Joe.

P. S. I can speak very good German and French now.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"By all means," he says, calmly, at last. "Let it stand for tonight. Mrs. Podswell, let me beg of you to accept this fact. I love your niece most dearly. The bent head is raised for a moment, and the violet eyes give him a look of passionate gratitude that nearly sends Aunt Podswell mad. "As to my worthiness—I mean in a worldly sense—I can never be anything but unworthy in any other—I hope to assure you at a more convenient time. But let me beg of you to accept it as a fact, that Signa will be my wife. She is not one to change."

"Not!" softly, dreamily, from Signa. "And I am as firm as a rock. Shall I go now?"

"One moment, Mr. —er—Warren!" says the rector, finding his voice at last; "I have to make a remark, but—er—perhaps Signa had better retire."

She does not move, but Hector Warren touches her on the arm and opens the door.

"Good-night, my own, my darling!" he murmurs, as obediently she passes out.

"Now, sir," he says, and his voice is colder and sterner, causing the rector to start uneasily.

"I—er—was about to remark, Mr. Warren, that though we are—I—er—am sure—honored by your proposal, that we have other views for our niece. Perhaps you are not aware that Sir Frederic Dylte has—er—proposed for her hand."

"Yes, I am quite aware."

"Well—er—I wish to be invidious, but really—I wish to spare your feelings, Mr. Warren—you must see, a gentleman of your acute perception must see—"

"That it is impossible," cuts in Mrs. Podswell, viciously. "Mr. Warren may be all very well—we know nothing against him—but Sir Frederic Dylte—"

"—she stops, the dark eyes regarding her patiently, or rather with careless suppressed impatience.

"I am quite aware that Sir Frederic has proposed for Signa's hand," he says, calmly, "and that Signa has refused him. I am convinced that nothing and nobody on earth would persuade her to revoke that refusal. I trust that nothing would persuade her to recall the assent she gave to my proposal."

"It shall never be!" exclaims poor Aunt Podswell, desperately.

Hector Warren smiles, almost gravely.

"I trust to Heaven that it may be!" he says. "Come, Mrs. Podswell, Signa is her own mistress, and if she prefers a poor man to Sir Frederic Dylte, who shall say her nay? I love her quite as well as Sir Frederic can do, and I will do my best to make her happy. As to Lady Blythe, I will write her to-night, and see that straight, and if—as they say in the play—you will consent, why then we shall be happy ever afterward, but—and the smile grows harder—"If you will not consent, why—we shall be happy ever afterward all the same! But, believe me, I am very anxious for your consent and good wishes."

"I—wash my hands of it!" exclaims Aunt Podswell, blinking on her sofa.

"Er—er—ah—perhaps we had better talk this over to-morrow!" says the rector, in despair. "After all, my dear, Signa is her own mistress!"

"She is an ungrateful, disobedient, self-willed girl!" exclaims Aunt Podswell.

"She is the sweetest, most generous and obedient child on earth!" says Hector Warren. "Good night, Mrs. Podswell; good night, sir!" and he makes his way into the hall, and has his hand upon the latch, when someone glides through the darkness toward him.

"Has the storm passed?"

"Nearly," he murmurs. "Good night, my darling, good night! Give me one last kiss!"

And she, as she lifts from him, turns her head over her shoulder and gives him what he asks.

When he gets home—which he does in a sort of rapturous dream—he comes down from the Olympian heights of lover's happiness, and collecting his thoughts, writes the following note to Lady Blythe:

"Dear Lady Blythe,—I lose no time in informing you that Miss Grenville has returned home to the Rectory, in my charge. She begs, and I join in her earnest request, that you will accept the simple fact of her departure from the Park and the impossibility of her return without question or reproach. Miss Grenville desires me to thank you most sincerely, and heartily, and affectionately for all your kindness to her. May I add that she has made my unworthy self most grateful and happy by the promise of her hand? I am, dear Lady Blythe, yours very faithfully.

"Hector Warren."

CHAPTER XIX.

"My dear creature, what is the use? You might just as well spare your breath and keep yourself cool! You might just as well try to move a rock as move Signa from her plighted troth!"

It is Lady Rookwell who speaks, with her keen little eyes twinkling with suppressed amusement, and the half-malicious, half-satirical grin wrinkling her painted and powdered face. It is a week since Signa returned to the Rectory in the company of Hector Warren, and the storm which he prognosticated has almost spent its force; but though the rector, and all Northwell from Lady Rookwell to Captain Jenks have accepted Signa's betrothal to the unknown gentleman who came to look over Lord Delamere's library, Aunt Podswell is still dissatisfied and complaining. That Signa should reject Sir Frederic Dylte for Hector Warren is to her something monstrous and unnatural, and to whomsoever she meets she pours out her lamentations. She has been doing so now for fully a quarter of an hour, and Lady Rookwell, encoined in one of the Rectory easy-chairs, has listened with quiet but intense amusement.

"But—but it is dreadful and unnatural!" wails Aunt Podswell, wiping her eyes, and sniffing. "Look at the difference, Lady Rookwell! She must be mad!"

"No doubt. Most girls are when they are in love. I tell you a sort of madness, and the great pity is that it is not incurable; but one soon gets over it. Marriage soon restores the patient to sanity. My dear, take my advice; as I said, you cannot move Signa. She is one of the sort who take the dice which we have consented to call love, very strongly. If it brought out spots like the measles, Signa would not be fit to be seen. In love! I never saw a girl so thoroughly and completely and madly in love. Why, she worships the ground he treads on. And he looks at her as if she were the first woman created, and he really could not get over his amazement and delight at so great a marvel," and the old worldling chuckles sardonically. "I met them wandering down the lane; I believe that they were holding hands—I do, indeed; but, anyway, they looked supremely happy. She is a beautiful creature; lovelier now than when she first came, and she was pretty enough, then. Heaven knows, to send a man out of his wits."

"I don't say that they were not attached to one another," wails Aunt Podswell; "but what are they going to live on?"

"Bread and cheese, and kisses," retorts her ladyship, sardonically. "It is an excellent diet for a newly married couple, and does not produce indigestion. My good soul, give it up as a bad job. They will be married as surely as—as—turtle doves pair in the spring. That you should be surprised amuses me. Why, I saw it the first night they were together."

But Aunt Podswell sniffs and groans.

"If I had guessed at such a misfortune, I would have refused to receive his visits!"

"Then they would have met in the lanes, or—anywhere, and she'd have run away with him," says Lady Rookwell, consolingly. "Marriages, my dear, are made in heaven—or the other place; I think this would have been manufactured in the former; and, after all, I rather like your Hector Warren. He is handsome enough, goodness knows—"

"Handsome is as handsome does!" puts in Aunt Podswell, solemnly.

"Exactly, my dear; and Hector Warren does very handsomely. He looks like a prince, and talks like a poet—or a wit—which he chooses for the moment, and he can climb trees like a cat, and sing like an angel; what on earth do you want? Money? Then all the romance would be gone, and he'd be just like any other man. A title? Bah! I've got a title, and how much am I the happier for it? It gives me the prestige of saying rude things, and stalking out of rooms before some other he'll get over it; it doesn't kill nowadays, whatever it might have done in our time. I remember crying my eyes out because they wouldn't let me have Jack Belvoir; but I'm glad now they didn't. He was almost as handsome as our Hector Warren, but he hadn't a penny; and by this time I should have been Mrs. Belvoir with ten children and four hundred a year. Ah, well, it's a strange world—isn't it, Mr. Warren?"

And she turns sharply as the door opens, and Hector Warren and Signa enter.

"It is the best of all possible worlds, my dear Lady Rookwell," he says, lightly, as he takes her hand.

"Yes, of course—the dearest, sweetest, happiest of worlds, isn't it, Miss 'Turtle Dove'?" retorts her ladyship, holding out her other beaming hand to Signa. "Give me a kiss. Is it warm outside, or have you always got that color on your olive cheeks, my dear? Take off your hat and let me look at you."

Laughingly Signa obeys, and Hector Warren takes her hat from her, and carries it reverently to a side table. Her ladyship grins.

"In twelve months' time, my dear, you will be permitted to carry your own hat; or if you give it to him he will pitch it on the sofa, and then forget all about it, and sit upon it."

"Will he?" says Signa, blushing and laughing. "Well, I can always retaliate, and sit upon his. Will you have some more tea? I am sorry I am so late—"

"My dear, don't fib—you are nothing of the sort. You know as well as I do that you would have liked to stay out wandering in the lanes hand in hand! You were, weren't you?"

"Yes," says Hector Warren, promptly, as Signa tries to keep down the tell-tale color. "If I am of no use, Lady Rookwell, you can't make us ashamed—certainly not me at any rate. Why shouldn't we go hand in hand? It is a glorious old custom: they do it now in Germany. Yes, we were hand in hand in the lanes is steep, you know—"

"Of course," retorts her ladyship. "You see, my dear," to Aunt Podswell, who sits bolt upright and looks scandalized, "they are both quite in earnest. But come, sir, I've some news for you."

"Have you?" he says, his whole attention devoted to handing Signa a cup and a slice of bread and butter as thin and unsubstantial as a wafer. "Is there any news?"

"To stare at your idiotic happiness, I suppose," retorts her ladyship. "Well, it hasn't: it is still going on, as if there were no such persons as Hector Warren and Signa Grenville to make simpletons of themselves. Do you want to know my news?"

He bows, and spreads a piece of bread and butter with jam, and takes it at a mouthful; there is something positively boyish in his intense happiness.

"It all depends," he says, pleasantly. "It is bad or good news? After all, it can't be bad while—"

His eyes wander to Signa as she moves about the room, putting things straight with that touch of the hand which women alone possess.

"Oh, of course not; while you have your lady love within reach, nothing matters. Thrones may totter and dynasties fall, and nothing signifies while you wander idly about hand in hand with your fellow simpleton."

"Signa, here is Lady Rookwell calling you opprobrious names."

"I don't care," comes the laughing response.

"Don't care was hung," says Lady Rookwell, grinning. "But come, I know you are dying of curiosity."

"Just dying," he assents, sinking back into the easy chair, and following Signa with his eyes. "What is it, Lady Rookwell? Have you come to tell us that an act of Parliament has been passed forbidding any marriages for the future?"

"Parliament will never attain to such a sensible act," she retorts. "No! I've had a letter from Laura Derwent."

He leans forward with mock alarm.

"Not another! Spare us, Lady Rookwell! As you are strong he merciful. What has that remarkable young lady done now—turned the Sultan of Turkey out of Constantinople, and seized the throne?—set the river on fire, and interviewed the emperor—taken possession of the Tulleries, or what? It sounds rude, but the mere mention of that young lady's name makes me tremble."

"Then you can tremble in real earnest," retorts Lady Rookwell, eyeing him with malicious enjoyment from behind her gold eyeglasses, "for she has written about you yourself!"

He leans back and takes up one of Signa's gloves, and examines it as if he has never seen such a curious article before.

"Can it be possible that so insignificant an individual as Hector Warren can come within the sphere of Miss Laura Derwent's thoughts?"

Lady Rookwell grins.

"No one is too insignificant to Laura Derwent, if she can make use of them. You don't know her."

"What is it? Do you keep me in suspense! What grievous command has she set upon me? The task—is it one of blood?"

"Hector!" murmurs Signa, coming behind him, and putting her hands on his shoulders with half-timid, half-bold tenderness.

"My dear child, I am quite serious. I am trembling in my boots. Keep me not in suspense, Lady Rookwell. The dread mandate, what is it? Thy slave is all attention."

The old lady looks at him with a keen scrutiny and nods her head.

"You may laugh," she says, "but what do you say to this? Laura Derwent is coming here in three weeks. He is silent for a moment's space, then he inclines his head slowly.

"In three weeks! Barely time to get the triumphal arches ready, and the red blaze, and brass band! Shall you have the whole of your pretty villa redecorated, Lady Rookwell?"

She grins until all her teeth are displayed.

"He! he! My villa! She is not coming here! She is coming to the Grange."

"In—deed," he says, slowly; "then she has taken Delamere at his word."

"Yes, of course. Didn't I tell you she would? And that isn't all. She means to take him at his fullest and most literal word. She means to have the Grange done up."

"Not for the world!" says Hector Warren. "What would Signa say if I refused to obey a lady's command?"

Miss Laura Derwent is too important a personage to be disobeyed. She is the queen of fashion, and we, her slaves, must bow the head and carry out her behests. Lady Rookwell, in two words, "I obey."

"But," wails Mrs. Podswell, "the expense! All this will cost thousands! Really, dear Lady Rookwell, this—this whim of your niece's is most extraordinary."

"Isn't it?" says Lady Rookwell, with sardonic calm; "but you see Mr. Warren is prepared to humor it, and as to the expense—"

Hector Warren laughs.

"That question is simple enough," he says. "My friend Delamere has given Miss Laura Derwent carte blanche, and she is quite within her right in availing herself of it. As to the expense, that is of no moment—"

"No moment!" saffie Aunt Podswell. "When it may be thousands!"

He shrugs his shoulders and smiles.

"That is Delamere's lookout, not ours," he answers. "He is reputed, and I have no doubt rightly, to be wealthy."

"He must be worth at least forty or fifty thousand a year," breaks in Lady Rookwell, sharply.

Hector Warren nods.

Jack's Appeal.

Eight-year-old Jack was a handsome youngster. Naturally the ladies who saw him wanted to kiss him, but Jack was not old enough to appreciate his privileges. One afternoon several friends of his mother called, and they all kissed him. Later on he went to the pictures, and instead of his pet cowboy scenes the films were all of a sentimental description. Young Jack returned home, pretty well tired of the whole tribe of women. To cap the climax, his mother said to him that evening when he was sent to bed: "Give mother a kiss, dear."

Jack looked appealingly toward his father and said:

"Dad, for goodness sake, kiss this woman!"—New York Times

A Timely Warning

The Dominion Conservation Commission issues the following timely warning to the Canadian people:
"A survey of conditions in the United States demonstrates that in the future there will be more coal famine than in the past and that they will occur at shorter intervals. For this there is only one remedy: Buy your coal in the summer. If you have not sufficient storage space, enlarge your coal bin."
The Dominion Conservation Commission has given thorough, scientific study to the coal situation and its advice should be heeded. The coal shortage in Canada during the past few months wrought considerable suffering and its effect might have been disastrous. Individual economy and national safety demand that the Canadian people take steps this coming summer to get as much of their coal supply as is possible for the winter of 1917-1918.

Letter to Rawdon Belgian Relief

Toronto, Jan., 27th, 1917

DEAR MRS. GREEN:
On behalf of the Belgian Relief Committee I wish to thank you and the members of the Rawdon Red Cross Society for the four cases of excellent clothing for Belgian Relief.

Every thing was useful and we are especially grateful for the new things. We hope to get a shipment off early next week and your shipments are already packed in our huge cases.

We have just had a very urgent appeal for socks, shirts and other "comforts" for the Belgian soldiers who have no women folk this side of the fighting line to send them parcels.

Through Mrs. Adamson we are able to send to about 400 soldiers now, and we intend having a "shower" for socks etc. in about two weeks as we have secured a little extra free transportation for February.

Thanking your Society for its splendid co-operation in this very necessary work. Yours very truly MRS. HELEN M. PEPLER, Convenor.

A Vegetable Garden for Every Home

IN this year of supreme effort Britain and her armies must have ample supplies of food, and Canada is the great source upon which they rely. Everyone with a few square feet of ground can contribute to victory by growing vegetables.

Four Patriotic Reasons for Growing Vegetables

1. It saves money that you would otherwise spend for vegetables.
2. It helps to lower the "High cost of living."
3. It helps to enlarge the urgently needed surplus of produce for export.
4. Growing your own vegetables saves labor of others whose effort is needed for other vital war work.

The Department of Agriculture will help you

The Ontario Department of Agriculture appeals to Horticultural Societies to devote at least one evening meeting to the subject of vegetable growing; manufacturers, labor unions, lodges, school boards, etc., are invited to actively encourage home gardening. Let the slogan for 1917 be, "A vegetable garden for every home."

Organizations are requested to arrange for instructive talks by practical gardeners on the subject of vegetable growing. In cases where it is impossible to secure suitable local speakers, the Department of Agriculture will, on request, send a suitable man.

The demand for speakers will be great. The number of available experts being limited, the Department urgently requests that arrangements for meetings be made at once; if local speakers cannot be secured, send applications promptly.

The Department suggests the formation of local organizations to stimulate the work by offering prizes for best vegetable gardens. It is prepared to assist in any possible way any organization that may be conducting a campaign for vegetable production on vacant lots. It will do so by sending speakers, or by supplying expert advice in the field.

To any one interested, the Department of Agriculture will send literature giving instructions about implements necessary; and methods of preparing the ground and cultivating the crop. A plan of a vegetable garden indicating suitable crops to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free of charge to any address.

His Last Good-Bye

Among the papers of the late Col. Forrester, who died last week at his home in Quebec, there were found the following verses that were written as a last good-bye to all his friends in apparent anticipation that his journey was almost over:

"Fare ye well" but not forever,
Though I journey far away,
God will bring us all together,
At the closing of the day.
As he collects her chickens,
Though they stray in quest of food
With her ample wings distended,
As she gathers in her brood.

And each happy little family
Landed on this far off shore,
Are rejoiced to end together,
Where they separate no more.
And indeed, it hath not entered,
In man's heart to understand,
All the joy God hath prepared
For man in this happy land.

FROM MONSTER TO GOOD KING

Life of Lewanika, King of African Barotses.

A Monument to Work of One Good Man.

In the heart of the sombre African jungle there died recently one of the greatest and last of the kings of the unknown, though not undiscovered, world—a ruler of one of those spaces bright to your fancy, dim on the map, black in truth, a part of "heart of darkness." The dead king was called Lewanika, head chief of the Barotses, and he was autocrat of the lives and destinies of some millions of black men dwelling in the forbidding valley of the upper Zambesi. Excepting Abyssinia, his was the greatest native empire on the barbaric continent, and the man himself perhaps the last of those picturesque and terrible monarchs whose doings and undosings took on a frightful shadow from contrast with the encroaching light of the world outside.

Lewanika, dead at 56, saw his country emerge from the wildest, murkiest savagery to a place literally within the slow sun of civilization. Beginning life as a butcher, outrager, and wholesale assassin, he closed it as a constructive and beneficent old barbarian, in love with the brilliant and mysterious great lands across the seas.

In his lifetime he abolished savage punishments, brutal sacrifices and with quiet, conciliatory way, who had come to take nothing, and was decidedly anxious to make friends. Lewanika long repulsed this visitor, but eventually yielded, received him and permitted his overtures.

This man was Francis Collard, the famous Zambesi missionary. When he came to his meal, with the king, that worthy squatted on the ground in complete nudity, and devoured ducks with his hands and teeth. Toward the end of his life the king had learned even an excellent taste in European foods, wines and table fittings.

Collard, by unshakable patience, got himself admitted to the confidence and trust of the king, who in time treated him with high honor and consulted him about the government of his tribe.

"What," he cried out one day in the face of recurring trouble, "shall I do with my people?"

Collard's reply is preserved in his diary, left on his death at Lewanika's court in 1904.

"Take the secret spear from under your cloak and throw it away; renounce vengeance once for all, attach your people to yourself by making their welfare your first object; put a stop to thefts, give them justice, quiet sleep, and good food to eat."

In 1902 Lewanika, attired in good European clothes and invariably equipped with a silk hat, attended the coronation of King Edward—Barotseland having before that time become a voluntary British protectorate. King Edward received him with great interest and British society took him up and lionized him.

Lewanika went home with his head untarnished, but with several new notions piled into it. He worked on the problem for four years before he dared anything so revolutionary as freeing his slaves. Then, even two years after Collard had died and his guiding hand had been removed, Lewanika abolished mark. Another reason for the furrows around a woman's mouth in her nervous, unbecoming and the consequent volubility of her speech. Actors and public speakers invariably have these wrinkles in the vicinity of the mouth as an inevitable outcome of the extra effort which the perspiration of their voices brings to bear upon the facial muscles in that region.

No beneficial effect can be accomplished without the abolition of the harmful cause. It you will avoid doing the things which are detrimental to the beauty of the lower part of the face, such as making faces when you talk, you can, by the aid of careful and persistent massage with astragol lotion, prevent appearance of the marks. Apropos of astragol lotion, it should be borne in mind that in all treatments of the face three things are absolutely necessary. First, the thorough cleansing of the epidermis; secondly, the softening of the tissues; and while they are in this state the moulding takes place through massage and the application of bandages, and finally friction with astragol preparations, which cause the parts under treatment to become fixed in the desired position.

CHILDHOOD AILMENTS

The ills of childhood come swiftly and too often before a doctor can be called in or medicine obtained the mother will always endeavor, her little one by keeping Baby's Own Tablets in the home. This medicine always does good—it can never do harm. Concerning it Mrs. Napoleon Lambert, St. Ignace, Que., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets are an excellent medicine for childhood ailments and I am well pleased with their use." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from 'The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MILITARY HOSPITAL LANTERN SLIDES

An Ontario minister the other day borrowed from the Military Hospital a set of lantern slides. These slides show what goes on at the hospitals and sanatoria. That is, they show something of how our injured soldiers are being restored to health and to power for self-support, however serious their injuries may be. The minister exhibited the slides at three country churches under his charge. In returning the set he wrote:

"My recording steward, who is also the postmaster and chairman of the local recruiting league, says they should be shown in every community. They meet the unrest in many families who have feared that the maimed who return will be forced to sell lead pencils or such like."

"What I should have done was to ask for them for a longer period and put them on in every available church in this district. A man with a well-prepared lecture and a few local slides could render a valuable service to the country, both in allaying the unrest referred to and in removing the prejudice in some families from which recruits might be secured."

The slides, with explanatory notes, may be borrowed by ministers and other responsible persons free of charge. Application should be made to the Military Hospitals Commission, 22 Victoria street, Ottawa.

Baking Bread for the Army

"Bakers, attention!"
At the front the words of command ring out in the great ovens. From their position, bent double over long troughs, 200 men straighten bolt upright, head erect, eyes steady, hands rigid at their sides.

"Carry on!"
Immediately 400 hands plunge into the silvery dough and the work of kneading begins again. A man clad in a sleeveless shirt, wearing a cook's cap, passes by me, bearing a heavy load of fresh dough, which he flings down a "shoot" to the floor below.

We are inspecting briefly the process of providing bread for an army. Here, in a former factory, the bread of the British armies in the field is being made. One hundred and twenty thousand two-pound loaves of bread are each day baked in the ovens of this bakery. I was given a slice of the bread. It was crisp, appetizing and excellent. Day and night the work is carried on by enlisted men of the army—men who wear their heads as proudly as any of the troops in the front-line trenches. The division of labor is admirable. Every device which tends to increase the efficiency of the men is eagerly insisted to be it is hand-made, one might also say home-made, bread that is delivered to the men at the front.

Here in the long shed, the flour that has just come in from Canada is stacked, and, passing through the hands of skilled workmen, is turned into bread as if by magic. A steady stream of kneaded dough, fresh leavened, is being carried to the ovens below it is gathered up and slung on flour-sprinkled tables, cut into round lumps about eight inches in diameter, each lump forming a loaf; each is carefully weighed to make all loaves of identical size. Then the loaves are shoveled into the ovens, baked to a turn, drawn out, carried into the adjoining storeroom, where they are left to cool; when cooled the fresh bread is packed in sacks, loaded into goods' vans, which wait right at the door of the building, and twelve hours from the time it has left this bakery the bread is in the hands of the quartermasters ready for distribution to the men.

Industrialism in its highest state of perfection never produced a more efficient organization. The men work at high speed. Military discipline prevails. There is no talking or chaffing. Here there is none of that atmosphere of personal irresponsibility so prevalent in industrial enterprises. I watched for a long time these men at the work, straining every nerve and muscle to do their best as efficiently as possible, and as we passed from hall to hall the command, "Bakers, attention!" brought the men instantly to the rigid position demanded by the drill regulations.

Looking over the long rows of faces I was not a little astonished to find such a variety of age. Gray-haired men at work side by side with what seemed to be more boys. On inquiring, I learned that fathers and sons often enlisted together for this special service, skilled men of the trade, who, before the war, had carried on their work for the most part in individual shops.

Those of us who have been taught to believe that the Englishman is a confirmed individualist, that he is incapable of organization in the German sense, must revise our notions. Those who have been led to believe that the British workman is opposed to compulsory military service and that trade union men are submitting reluctantly to army regulations must change their point of view. As a soldier here, a trade union man, said to me, "The finest union in the world is the army."

This great bakery is but a model of many other such establishments which I visited. Nearby are warehouses filled with stores for the troops in the field. The amount of goods handled in one consignment is stupendous; 50,000 tons of jam, 20,000 boxes of meat, cases of onions by the thousand, bags of sugar by the 10,000, boxes of tea by the ton, and the like. Brought in from all parts of the world direct by transport the goods are stored in the warehouses, stacked in piles so arranged that though hundreds of thousands of cases and sacks are here stored, yet almost at a glance the exact amount of the goods on hand can be counted. The supplies are so vast that no matter how great the requisition may be it can be instantly filled. I walked through long rows of goods stacked up in blocks as high as city houses. The different types of wares are arranged in squares resembling a city street. Here is a square all of sugar; close by, one of jam; beyond, another of marmalade and so on. All the goods bear British trade marks, with the exception of the tinned meat. We walked for half a mile through this strange and silent city of foodstuffs. "Le pays de Cognac" (the land of plenty), as a Russian companion remarked to me, shining up at a high edifice made of bags of sugar.

It is a fact admitted by everyone that no army in the field is better cared for or fed than the British troops in France, but at the same time in current belief that no army is as extravagant. This latter opinion, which is widely held not merely in neutral countries, but even in England, would not seem to be during a brief sojourn. I found everywhere signs of rigid economy.

borne out by the facts. On the contrary, as far as could be observed a regimental cook at a base told me that he had saved 8,000 rations during the last month. This does not mean that the allowance of fresh meat, bread, butter, cheese, jam and tea is greater than needed to satisfy the appetite of the average man, and as the rations are pooled, the saving is made without anyone noticing it, while the economy to the nation in pounds, shillings and pence is enormous.

Efficiency and economy are the two dominant factors of success in modern warfare, as in modern industry. The old spirit of "muddle" to which many cling so tenaciously during the first and even the second year of the war has been swept by the board. The third, and as many hope and confidently believe, the last year of the war is opening auspiciously. The signs of success are not to be read exclusively in the bulletins from the fighting front, nor estimated by the number of prisoners taken or miles of trenches captured, but rather by watching how smoothly, silently, irresistibly the great machine of the army, now perfected in every part, is gearing up the speed of efficiency, economizing and conserving its energy and resources—London Mail.

Mr. R. J. Thompson, of Uxbridge, Tells the Story of His Terrible Trouble and Almost Miraculous Escape.

Uxbridge, Ont. March 15.—(Special)—Mr. R. J. Thompson, living a hard life, had fourteen convulsions in one afternoon. The doctors did not think he could live. To-day he is well and strong. He says Dodd's Kidney Pills did it. But let him tell his own story:

"I am delighted with Dodd's Kidney Pills," Mr. Thompson states. "I have only taken eleven boxes, and I feel like myself again."

"It was taken ill very suddenly. I ate my dinner and went to take a man home. I just got about three-quarters of a mile when I was taken with the convulsion fit. I had fourteen fits the afternoon and the third day I had nine more."

"The doctors said I could not live and if I did I would never be able to do anything again. As I had chronic Bright's Disease, But, thank God, I am doing my own work once again, by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Bright's Disease is the most advanced stage of kidney disease. It can be avoided if the earlier stages of kidney trouble are remedied by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

THE GRIFFON.

Almost within hearing of the roar of Niagara Falls is a little village on the banks of the New York Central called Griffon. And few of the thousands who yearly fly through its "sky-rail" ever know that this unassuming little town was the birthplace of commerce on the Great Lakes.

In August, 167, a French nobleman, Robert de La Salle, came to this point on the Niagara River, and at once began to build a sailing vessel, which he hoped to carry on trade with the western Indians. The craft was launched in 1683. About the craft was launched in 1683. About the craft was launched in 1683.

On the 1st of the launching the vessel was named Griffon. It was of 100 tons and carried a crew of thirty-four men. It was armed with seven 12-pound cannons and was a great success. It was the first of the launching the vessel was named Griffon. It was of 100 tons and carried a crew of thirty-four men.

Efficiency and economy are the two dominant factors of success in modern warfare, as in modern industry. The old spirit of "muddle" to which many cling so tenaciously during the first and even the second year of the war has been swept by the board.

DARDANELLES EXPEDITION A WINSTON CHURCHILL SCHEME

Commissioner Appointed To Investigate Responsibility for the Failure So Decides.

Too Much Work Was Centred On Kitchener—"Jackie" Fisher Blamed for Quitting.

London Cable.—The Dardanelles expedition, as far as Great Britain was concerned, was undertaken on the initiative of Col. Winston Churchill, then First Lord of the Admiralty, according to a majority report of the commission appointed to inquire into the responsibility for the expedition, which was issued today. The report summarizes the conclusions reached as follows:

"The question of attacking the Dardanelles was on the initiative of Mr. Churchill, brought under the consideration of the War Council on November 26, 1914, as the method of defeating the Turkish army. It was assumed that, inasmuch as all the authorities concerned were prima facie in favor of a joint military rather than a purely naval attack, such an attack, if undertaken, would have been of the former, rather than of the latter character, had not other circumstances led to a modification of the programme. A communication from the Russian Government of Jan. 2 introduced a fresh element into the case. The British Government considered that something must be done in response to it, and in this connection the question of attacking the Dardanelles was again raised.

"The Secretary of State for War declared that there was no troops immediately available for operations in the east, and his statement was accepted by the War Council, who took no steps to satisfy themselves by reports of estimates as to what troops were available then or in the future. Had this been done, the commissioners think it would be ascertained that sufficient troops would be available for a joint military and naval operation at an earlier date than supposed, but this matter was not adequately investigated by the War Council. Thus the question before the War Council on Jan. 13, was whether action should be taken by the fleet alone, the navy being held to be the only force available.

"Mr. Churchill's plan to have advocated an attack by ships alone before the War Council, on a certain amount of half-hearted and hesitating expert opinion which favored a tentative or progressive scheme, beginning with an attack upon the outer forts. This attack, if successful, was to be followed by further operations against the main defences of the narrow straits. There does not appear to have been direct support or direct opposition from the responsible naval and military advisers, Lord Fisher and Sir James Wolfe Murray, as to the practicability of carrying on the operations as approved by the War Council, viz., to bombard and take Gallipoli peninsula, with Constantinople as the objective."

KITCHENER FAVORED IT.

"The First Sea Lord and Sir Arthur Wilson, who were the only naval advisers present at the War Council, expressed no dissent. Lord Kitchener, who occupied a commanding position at the time the decision was taken, was in favor of the project. Both Lord Fisher and Sir Arthur Wilson would have preferred a joint naval and military attack, but they did not express dissent to the War Council, and were not asked to express any opinion on the subject, and offered no objection to naval operations, as they considered them experimental, and such as could be discontinued if the first results obtained were not satisfactory. The commissioners think that there was an obligation, first on the First Lord, secondly, on the Premier, thirdly, on one other member of the War Council, to see that the views of the naval advisers were clearly put before the council, and that the naval advisers should have expressed their views to the council, whether asked or not. If they considered the project which the council was about to adopt as impracticable from a naval point of view."

"Looking at the position which existed on Jan. 13, 1915, the commissioners do not think the War Council was justified in coming to the decision of the proposition which had been suggested to them. The commissioners hold that the possibility of making a surprise amphibious attack on Gallipoli offered such great military and political advantage that it was mistaken and ill-advise to decide to undertake a purely naval attack, which from its nature, could not obtain completely the object set out in the terms of the decision.

"The decision taken on the 16th to mass troops in the neighborhood of the Dardanelles, and to make a very critical stage of the whole operation. It ought to have been clear that when this was done once, even if troops were not actually landed, it would be apparent to the world that a serious attack was intended, and a withdrawal of military occupation, and falling back on the original intention of dispatching from a naval attack if the experiences gained during the bombardment were unsatisfactory."

"On Feb. 20 Lord Kitchener decided that the 29th division, part of the troops, which by the decision of Feb. 16 were to be sent to the east, should not be sent at this time, and Col. Fitzgerald instructed the director of military transport to arrange for the expeditionary force would not be required. This was done without informing the First Lord, and the despatch of troops was thus delayed three weeks. This delay greatly increased the probability of success of the original attack by land forces, and materially increased the difficulties encountered in the final attack some months later.

"We consider that, in view of the opinions expressed by the naval and military advisers at the spot, the decision to abandon the naval attack after the bombardment of March 18 was inevitable. There was no meeting of the War Council between March 19 and May 14. Meanwhile important land operations were undertaken. We think that before such operations were commenced the War Council should have carefully considered the whole position.

"We are of the opinion that Lord Kitchener did not sufficiently avail himself of the services of his general staff, with the result that more work was possible for him than it was possible for him to do, and confusion and want of efficiency resulted.

BARON FISHER CENSURED.

"We are unable to concur in the view set forth by Lord Fisher that it was his duty, if he differed from the chief of his department, to maintain silence at the council or to resign. We think that the adoption of any such principle generally would impair the efficiency of public service.

"We think that, although the main object was not attained, certain important political advantages, upon the nature of which we have already dwelt, were secured by the Dardanelles expedition. Whether these advantages were worth the loss of life and treasure involved is and must always remain a matter of opinion."

Major-General Charles E. Callwell, who was director of military operations at the War Office at the time of the Dardanelles expedition, stated that the general staff virtually ceased to exist, because it was not consulted. The principle of centralization, the report says, was pushed to the extreme point by Lord Kitchener. It proved a failure in the operations in the Sudan, but in large operations it threw on one man more work than any individual could cope with.

Andrew Fisher, Australian High Commissioner in London, in a note issued by the War Office, says that he presents from the findings of the majority that the naval officers should have expressed their views at the War Council, and from the opinion of the majority that Lord Fisher was not justified in resigning.

Thomas McKenna, High Commissioner of New Zealand, in London, takes similar objections to those of Mr. Fisher to the conclusions of the Dardanelles Commission regarding Lord Fisher and the naval advisers. Mr. McKenna also expressed the opinion that the commission is not yet justified in coming to a decision as to the results of the enterprise.

The report is an interim one, dealing exclusively with the origin and progress of the attack on the Dardanelles. It is signed by the late Lord Cromer, who was chairman of the commission; Andrew Fisher, representing Australia; Thomas McKenna, representing New Zealand; Sir Frederick Cavell, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; James A. Clyde, Lord Advocate; Stephen Le Gwynn, Nationalist member of the House of Commons; Rear Admiral Baron Nicholson and Justice Pickford. The dissenting notes of Mr. Fisher and Mr. McKenna, a separate report was presented by Walter F. Roth, Liberal member of the House of Commons from Pembroke, who, Mr. Roth makes an exhaustive exposure of the attitude of Lord Fisher, who, he says, all along vigorously opposed the Dardanelles expedition, and on Jan. 23 actually left the council table, declaring he would resign his office.

The decision of the War Council had been taken, and the expedition begun, Lord Fisher, the report continues, did everything in his power to assist. His whole theory of the use of the British sea power in the war, Mr. Roth says, was embodied in a memorandum submitted to the Admiralty in January, 1915, to Premier Asquith. The Germans have already enjoyed, without success, to scatter our strength by attacks on our trade, and by submarines and mines. The pressure of sea power is a slow process, and requires great patience. In time it will almost certainly compel the enemy to seek a decision in sea. This is one reason for husbanding our strength. Another reason is that the prolongation of the war at sea tends to raise up fresh enemies for the dominion of neutrality. This tendency is only checked by the conviction that an overwhelming naval supremacy is being exercised by the nation exercising the sea power.

"The sole justification of bombardments and attacks by the fleet on fortified places such as the Dardanelles is to force a decision at sea. As long as the German high sea fleet possesses its present strength and splendid gunnery efficiency, so long is it imperative that no operation be undertaken by the British fleet calculated to impair its superiority, which is none too great in view of the heavy losses already experienced in ships and men, which latter cannot be filled in the period of the war, in which the navy differs materially from the army. Even the older ships should not be risked, for they cannot be lost without losing men, and they form the only reserve behind the great fleet."

518,741 PENSIONERS.

Huge Figures of the Department in Britain

London Cable.—Minister of Pensions Barnes gave some astonishing figures in the House of Commons today when he came to review the operations of the Pensions Department. He explained that the Ministry had charge of the following:

Disabled men	140,275
Children of disabled men	157,544
Widows	62,796
Children of widows	128,294
Dependent on deceased men	29,832

Total on books 518,741. Besides these there were 125,000 widows who are now drawing separation allowances, but will soon go on the pension list; 65,000 men in hospitals, and 65,000 men medically unfit. Those figures brought the total number of military and children to 773,771. Medically unfit, of whom over 100,000 were not to be granted pensions, were to be put back where the State found them. In exceptional cases there would be a gratuity of £100. The scheme in its entirety would involve a capital charge of £296,000,000, and for the first two years £25,000,000.

GRAVE OUTLOOK FACES GERMANY

Prussian Food Controller Warns of Possible Famine.

People Ignore Laws—The Junkers Blamed.

London Cable.—The Prussian food controller, Dr. George Michaelis, made in the Prussian Diet yesterday what the Koelnische Zeitung calls a serious speech on the food situation, says a Reuter despatch from Amsterdam. Dr. Michaelis declared that the distress was such that a more severe state of things, especially in the large industrial centres, could hardly be imagined. He indicated the possibility that all surplus stocks of grain would be exhausted, and said that very radical measures were needed to enable the people to hold out until next year.

"We have in the third year of the war," the food controller is quoted as saying, "discovered that among all sections of the people the general feeling evidenced is not one of that endurance for which we have hoped. This is human nature, but it is highly deplorable, and may have most serious results.

"We have not perceived in the towns that stern supervision which is absolutely necessary in the distribution of foodstuffs. There has been widespread abuse of bread tickets, entailing grave consequences as regards our stocks. Bread tickets have been illegally used on such a shocking scale that our entire reserves were exhausted. So when potatoes failed and bread was ordered as a substitute, there was none available. Flour has been stolen and carried off, owing to irregularities in the mill."

Dr. Michaelis concluded by urging the utmost severity to remedy the short-comings while there was yet time. Some of the mills would have to be closed and the municipalities deprived of their autonomous powers. Rationing and requisitioning must be strictly applied with respect to eggs, milk, butter, fruit and vegetables. He added:

"We are confronted with the thought of what would happen if this measure also should fail and what grim starvation there would be if suddenly during the closing months of the economic year we should find there was no efficiency and we could not hold out. The ensuing misery would be indescribable."

The speech caused a sensation and the Socialist Union, who followed, according to the Rheinisch Westfälische Zeitung, declared that the junkers were to blame if a famine supervened. An attempt was being made, he said, to shift the blame on England.

"The selfishness of the agriculturists," he said, "is the cause of the high prices. The war would long since have been ended if everybody had to suffer hunger equally. The present meat ration is insufficient. To withhold such a necessary from the people is inhuman. I recall Professor Abbes' statement from the Council of the War-People's Diet that the strike of munition workers in Essen and Berlin, owing to underfeeding, have only too well justified him."

The Minister of Agriculture then spoke and vigorously defended himself against attacks. He alluded to the critical situation created by the partial success of the Entente's plan of starving Germany, and added:

"For the small bread ration one can only make the Almighty responsible, who has not given us the harvest we expected."

"It would save us much-needed floor space and considerable money if more of our women customers would use the flour when going up only one 'ager.' I wish I knew some way to make 'em do it." "Why not take the mirrors out of the elevator and put 'em on the stairs?" suggested his bright assistant, a Buffalo Express.

BRITISH AND FRENCH GAIN ON THE WEST

Gen. Haig's Men Advance Both Sides of Ancre, Nivelle's in Champagne.

HUNS' AWFUL TRIALS

Shown in Newly-Evacuated Ground—Bapaume Ridge in Danger.

London Cable.—Thursday's official report from British headquarters in France reads:

"We have advanced our lines slightly on either side of the Ancre valley; otherwise the situation is unchanged. Last night our troops successfully entered the enemy trenches, near Biaches and secured some prisoners. Southeast of Chaubais and south of Arras (the enemy raised our front line in each case the raid was preceded by a heavy bombardment. A few of our men are missing."

London, March 7.—On the front held by the British in France slight additional successes have been achieved in the Ancre valley and near Biaches. The British have captured the first-line positions after heavy bombardments and captured a few men. In the Champagne region the French have re-won from the Germans a salient captured February 15 between Mesnil and Maisons de Champagne, taking more than a hundred prisoners. The Paris War Office report reads:

"In Champagne, after intense artillery preparations, our troops succeeded in capturing the greater part of a salient occupied by the enemy on February 15 between Mesnil and Maisons de Champagne. One hundred prisoners, among them two officers, remained in our hands."

PURSUED IN RETREAT.

British Headquarters in France. Cable.—The enemy is being closely pursued in his retreat, as the action at Bouchavesnes indicates. There he hurried out of a broad front with the loss of 200 prisoners and a number of machine guns and trench mortars. This so seriously affected his local plans that he made several heavy counter-attacks, and so added unintentionally to our profit. A large number of dead were sent in front of our position. Since then he appears to have accepted the situation, except with peevish artillery protests. That this little gain north of Peronne was followed by such desperate and costly efforts at recapture serves to show the need of some really military skill by the Germans to keep a balance of machine guns and trench mortars. Officers who have been over the ground elsewhere tell me the evidence of our punishment of the enemy's late ground this winter has surprised them. It is much worse than they expected. The vacated German positions are a shocking compost of clay, barbed wire and debris. There are no communication trenches in the front line. These have been obliterated. Any roads leading to the front positions cannot even be recognized as roads. They are sloughs containing bodies of men who were drowned because such was their state of mind that they would rather take chances in those sloughs than face the horrors of crossing the open. A staff officer who went to the famous position near Miraumont told me that the result of the shelling there was indescribably hideous. He had never seen anything so bad. Remember, it was that appalling prospect which had to be faced by all German troops that were at the front. Whether returning or going in retreating, or providing for comrades, they had to face it. It must have ended in madness for some of them, and despair and miserable fear in most.

BAPAUME RIDGE POSITION.

London, Cable.—Hillarie Belloc in today's issue of Land and Water, writes informally, but cautiously, of the Bapaume ridge position, pointing out that the watershed between the North Sea and the English Channel turns at Monchy through Essarts and north to Bucquoy, through the wood of Logeast, just south of Achiet-le-Grand, then through Blucourt to Bapaume, the so-called ridge, covering the watershed between the Scheldt and the Somme, and from Bucquoy to Achiet-le-Grand. He points out that Monchy is the highest point of the ridge, a salient like Sero, recently abandoned, was difficult to hold, subject to the convergent fire, and being already under direct observation. Belloc writes: "Monchy is the key of the ridge; if the enemy is compelled to evacuate it, the ridge, as a defensive system, is jeopardized. Upon the whole, the chances are in favor of the enemy not being able to hold continuously to this critical point, and consequently his permanent mastery of Bapaume ridge. Should the enemy be compelled to abandon the ridge (that he intends to do so at the present moment may be confidently denied, but he may be compelled to do so in another matter), he immediately depends on ground in an extremely unfavorable. One may conclude within the limits of uncertainty attaching to all matters, that the war is of serious, even vital importance to the enemy. If he is compelled to abandon it, it will be the signal for an offensive to be launched. The whole of the ridge is in the hands of the British. The entire Nivelle salient northeast of Paris, on account of the railroad and highway communications. The enemy year's reserves and massed greater forces for offensive somewhere limited to operations only on the Bapaume sector.

MURDERER MUST DIE.

Slayer of Custodian Sentenced at Windsor.

Windsor Report.—In the historic old court house of Sandwhich the death sentence was passed at eight o'clock to-night upon John Hogue, alias James Steward; who on the night of Jan. 26 last shot and killed William Stanshall Jackson, of Winnipeg, a Canadian immigration officer. The offender was escorted Hogue to the place to which state he was being deported as an undesirable alien. In some way Hogue obtained possession of Jackson's revolver, and as the train reached Windsor Hogue drew the weapon and fired, the bullet taking effect in Jackson's abdomen, and he died within a few minutes.

The trial to-day was one of the briefest in Essex County criminal annals. It lasted exactly ten hours and five minutes. Hogue was unable to produce any witnesses in his own defense, and his attorney, Barrister F. C. Kirby, of Windsor, put his client on the stand. The only motive shown was Hogue's desire to escape before crossing the boundary line. His story on the stand told of only kindness from the man he had killed. Hogue declared he carried the revolver in his hand, not intending to shoot, but merely to "bluff" his custodian into permitting him to escape. He said he thought the jar of the train caused the revolver to be discharged.

It was five o'clock when the jury retired. Sheriff George Foreman Smith sent in word that a verdict had been arrived at, and the court at once reconvened, the verdict was announced, and without delay Hogue was sentenced to be hanged in Sandwhich jail yard on May 10 next.

NO CHANGE ON WESTERN FRONT

British Planes Do Useful Work With Camera.

Foe Sent Up Many to Prevent, but Failed.

London cable: The British official communication issued this evening says:

"During the past 24 hours there has been no change in the situation. Our artillery has shelled hostile batteries which were shelling Ypres. We have again bombed enemy trenches west of Messines."

"There was considerable aerial activity Tuesday, our machines effecting a deal of successful reconnaissance photography and obtaining valuable information. Many bombs were dropped on enemy billets and dumps. The enemy made determined but unsuccessful efforts to stop our work, sending up a very large number of machines. There was much aerial fighting all along the front throughout the day, during which three hostile machines were brought down and three others driven down damaged. Four of our machines were brought down and seven others are missing."

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris cable says: The official communication issued by the War Office Wednesday night read:

"On the Verdun front our batteries took under their fire enemy detachments in the northern outskirts of Malmecourt Wood. We effectively shelled German organizations in the Eparges wood. The artillery fighting was quite active in the sector of the Malmaison de Champagne and Embellment. There is nothing to report on the rest of the front."

"The 'trampler' (aeroplane) which fell on March 6 inside our lines north of Laval, was brought down by Lieut. Pinsard, the fifth enemy aeroplane over which this pilot has triumphed. Belgian communication: 'A real pre-war bombardment was carried out east of Namur, east and north of Dixmude.'"

HOLY CITY SOON TO BE BRITISH

Washington Report.—Jerusalem, the ancient capital of Palestine, may soon be in the hands of the British as well as Bagdad. These are the latest reports here today. These reports say the advance guards of the British troops advancing through Palestine from Egypt are within forty miles of the city. One despatch had it that El Chalil, which is in the mountains of Southern Palestine and about twenty miles from Jerusalem. The Allied troops are now invading Asia Minor for three sides. One British force advancing into Palestine from Egypt, another advancing in the Taurus Valley, while the Russians are fighting on the Persian front.

It is believed here that if the British succeed in taking Jerusalem the American refugees there, numbering over a thousand, will choose to remain instead of attempting to proceed to Beirut to secure transportation to the United States as they had planned. The British capture of the city would also open a new route out of Turkey for the Americans who wished to return to the United States in any event.

NATIONALIST HOME RULE MANIFESTO

Appeals to Irish Race in the Dominions and United States.

BREAK OF FAITH

Charged Against Lloyd George in His Treatment of the Question.

London Cable.—A manifesto issued today by the Nationalists says the constitutional movement may yet be saved, but only by the active assistance of all level-headed Nationalists in Ireland, and especially the millions of the Irish race in the Dominions and in the United States.

"If we appeal," says the manifesto, "promptly to use all means in their power to induce the British Government to deal with Ireland in accordance with the principles which they are fighting in Europe. We especially appeal to America. In application to Ireland with a view to the restoration of the Home Rule, the principles so clearly and so eloquently enunciated in President Wilson's address to the Senate."

The manifesto contains the declaration that the attitude adopted by Premier Lloyd George in his course of yesterday's debate in the House of Commons shows an entire change of opinion on the Ulster question and is a breach of faith with the Irish party and the Irish nation.

The Nationalists decided to send the manifesto to President Wilson and the members of the British Dominions.

TEXT OF MANIFESTO.

The text of the Nationalist manifesto follows:

"The Premier, in his speech yesterday in the debate on Home Rule, took up a proposition which, if adhered to, would involve denial of self-government to Ireland forever. He laid down the principle that the small minority in northern Ireland should have the veto, so long as they chose to exercise it, of self-government for united Ireland. That is a position to which the representatives of Ireland can never assent."

"He asserted that he had never changed his position on the so-called coercion of Ulster. That is not true. He was a party to the drafting of the original Home Rule bill, which applied to all Ireland. He was a party to the rejection in two sessions, in the fact of a most vigorous protest from representatives of northeast Ulster, and when under pressure of threatened rebellion, he and the Government yielded to the threats of rebellion hurled at them by Sir Edward Carson, the present First Lord of the Admiralty."

"The Government of that day, through the present Prime Minister, appealed to us to consent to the concession of county option for a strictly limited period. We agreed, on the pledge, repeatedly given by Mr. Lloyd George on his own behalf and on behalf of the Government, to consent to this concession, which we should never be asked for any further concessions, and that the Government would undertake to see the settlement through at any cost. How then, can Premier Lloyd George say that he never changed his attitude on the question of Ulster?"

A WAR ARRANGEMENT.

The manifesto sets forth that the negotiations undertaken at the request of the Government last July referred to a strictly war arrangement with the understanding that a year after the ending of the war things would revert to the status quo ante, and that the attitude of the Prime Minister last night showed a total change on the Ulster question and generally on the question of Home Rule for Ireland, and a breach of faith to the Irish party and nation, and would tend to destroy the power of the revolutionary movement in that country."

"In view of the terrible seriousness of the situation for Ireland and the Empire created by this speech of the manifesto, we feel it would be idle to prolong the debate and felt bound to mark in the most emphatic methods open to us our sense of the gravity of the situation and meet immediately for consultation on the future policy of the Irish Nationalist party."

THE IRISH PRO-GERMAN.

"The action of the British Government since the formation of the coalition in May, 1915, culminating in the Prime Minister's speech, has made the task of carrying on the constitutional movement in Ireland so difficult that it is almost impossible. The constitutional movement can yet be saved, but only by the active assistance of all level-headed Nationalists in Ireland, and to a special degree by the millions of the Irish race in the Dominions and in the United States. To them we appeal most earnestly to come to the aid of those who have rescued Ireland from being made the cat's paw and tool of Germany, and who are struggling against terrible odds to keep open the door to Irish liberty through peaceful, constitutional means—a struggle in which we are hampered by the British Government, which plays into the hands of the Irish pro-German, revolutionary party with stupid perversity, worthy of the worst reactionaries of Petrograd."

"Early to bed and early to rise is a good motto. If you don't get up in the morning you'll never get up in the world."

First Call for Mechanics

12,000 to Receive Booklet During the Next Week. Chance to learn Aviation.

Twelve thousand Ontarians who have some knowledge of mechanics will receive during the coming week from the National Service Board, Ottawa, a comprehensive booklet which tells them all about the latest addition to the Canadian forces, the Royal Flying Corps. The information is being sent to those men as a result of their offer to do their share for national service.

It was recently decided that Canada is to have its own flying corps. Not only are the machines to be manufactured and built in this country, but thoroughly experienced air officers and men have arrived from England for the purpose of organizing the corps. In every squadron a considerable number of mechanics are required, and the National Service organization was called upon with a view to obtaining the men required for this work. The records have been gone over to ascertain how many mechanics had filled out National Service cards. In the Province of Ontario, cards, 12,000 names were found of men whose different mechanical trades showed they would be suitable.

Three thousand mechanics being all that is required, no other cards have as yet been sorted and it is expected that the full quantity should be easily secured in Ontario alone, although of course men from other provinces are eligible.

The Royal Flying Corps is called on the battle fronts the eyes of the army. It is considered the corps d'élite of the service and in the British Isles there is a constant waiting list of those who have done their duty at the front and who have applied for transfer to the flying corps. Many Canadians who went overseas with other units have been transferred to its ranks, with the result that Canadian pilots and mechanics have gained most enviable names for themselves and increased the high prestige of Canada as one of the strong arms of the Empire.

For this reason it was decided to have a Canadian corps, and not only have we the best training grounds, with wide areas to practice on or over, but we have everything that goes into the building of an airship. Men who have great adaptability and initiative and Mechanical skill are also required and we have the right type.

This last is what is being called for now—mechanics who will work at the squadron headquarters and airbases, keeping the machines in running order for the pilots, and whose work will be all on the ground. This, however, does not preclude those who engage in this service from joining the aerial branch afterwards if they see fit and are qualified.

Those mechanics who have been rejected for overseas service on account of the strictness of the medical examination, and those whose ties at home have prevented them joining, have now a wonderful opportunity. The medical examination for the Royal Flying Corps is nothing like as strict, nor is it at all onerous that it should be, as there are no heavy kits to carry or long marches to go on, in this service. Moreover, to men who desire a permanent well-paying livelihood after the war, the mechanical end of the air service is the one to adopt, as air transportation in the future will go forward with leaps and bounds. The result will be that those who have a good knowledge of the work, which can be gained in the Royal Flying Corps, will command good salaries and continuous employment.

History always repeats itself, especially in the mechanical trades; it will be the old story over again of the development of the harvester, the bicycle, the electrical industry, and the automobile, when even those who had only a fair but practical knowledge were in great demand and rose to big positions. The same means of such concerns. The Royal Flying Service is this century's mechanical achievement, and combining as it does, daring and skill, it gives every one that has either of these qualifications, one of the few openings in a lifetime, to secure the knowledge and practice that will enable him to serve the Empire now and again an experience that will be extremely valuable in the future.

Life in German Prisons British are Ill-Treated

Hon. Dr. Beland, former Postmaster-General of Canada, has had Exceptionally Hard Usage.

London, Feb. 29.—Lodged in the cell next to that of Hon. Dr. Beland, late of the Dominion Cabinet, Mr. C. Mellor, of London, has just arrived at his English home after thirty months' captivity in Germany. Amusement and indignation at the gentle and considerate manner in which the British are looking after German prisoners in this country brings bitter remarks to lips of this repatriated man. He only wishes the authorities here could see the way Britishers in Germany are treated.

"Germans actually walking loose in the streets of London!" exclaimed Mr. Mellor as the Telegram talked to him. "Yes, thousands of them. I was simply astounded to hear and to see it. What, I will venture to say that you wouldn't find one Englishman walking about Berlin—unless a couple of soldiers were guarding him. The humanness of the Government makes me tired. What we need here are reprisals for the damnable way the Huns have treated our people. I know Downing Hall, where we keep German officers in luxury, and when I think of how British officers were refused the right of buying butter in Germany just because they were English, it makes my blood boil.

SORRY FOR BELAND

"Poor Beland!" remarked the erstwhile captive, "I feel very sorry for him. For two months I occupied the cell next to him in a prison—yes, just a common prison for criminals, where he had been interned ever since war started. And the man had done absolutely nothing to deserve it. It is an outrage on all the laws of warfare, that an unoffending civilian—especially Minister of the Crown, and a member of Parliament, should be closely confined and herded with criminals. It is entirely the doing of the Berlin authorities, who seem to have a special spite against Beland and either think or, what is more likely, pretend to think that Beland is a particularly valuable captive who must be restrained with more than usual harshness.

LOCKED UP AT NIGHT

"At seven every night a turnkey comes along the passage and locks Dr. Beland into his cell, whence he is not released until nine next morning. Although measuring only eight feet by ten, with pictureless walls, and devoid of furniture save for the wire-mattressed bed and bedding, and a wooden stool, the tiny chamber is well lighted, comfortably heated and clean. But think of two years spent in such a place! For exercise Beland is permitted to walk up and down a passage some seventy feet long, and at stated times to go out into the yard, a brick-walled enclosure some 50 by 60 feet in area. Here he is forced to herd with thieves and other common criminals, who are serving terms of from eighteen months to two years.

COULDN'T VISIT DYING WIFE

"The doctor is well enough, and gets his parcels of food regularly," continued my informant but he is naturally very depressed with his long confinement, and particularly at the shameful way the German authorities in Berlin treated him in connection with his wife's illness. Hearing she was dying Dr. Beland appealed to the authorities that he might be taken under escort to see her. He offered to pay all expenses. But his prayers met with a flat refusal. His poor wife, longing to see him once again, passed away without the last farewell, and the tortured man sat agonized in his cell, awaiting the news.

"It is nonsense our Government putting up with such cases. Let us tell Germany that for every instance of the kind a German officer of high rank will be clapped into a common jail and kept there until the German Government stops seeing red and gets reasonable."

PREMIER MAY INTERVENE

The whole matter has been laid before Sir George Perley, and it is hoped that Sir Robert Borden will once more endeavor to have Dr. Beland's condition ameliorated, though the German Government have proved obdurate to such requests before.

"I wasn't always in a common jail in Germany," continued my informant. "First in Ruhleben, I was moved to another such camp, and here one day the censor told me that unless I improved my handwriting I would not be allowed to send any more letters out. However, I overcame this difficulty by getting a soldier to smuggle them out for me. Eventually they discovered by my diary that I had thus despatched fifty-one letters, and I was arrested and tried. I refused to

MISS D. CALDWELL

Spring Millinery Openings

From the famous designers of New York are charming reproductions and creations. Copies of the most expensive model in both black and colors at popular prices. Combination of Liere, Straw Braids, Fancy Braids, Silks and Crepes. Made in small, close fitting effects, with narrow brims in turbans and tricornes and in many new sailors and the larger portrait styles. All are simple, but stylishly trimmed with narrow ribbons in picturesque colorings and oriental ornaments.

MISS CALDWELL

Yesterday and today the millinery parlors are thronged with the fair sex selecting their Easter Bonnets and a great variety to choose from. A brief description of just a few will be interesting.

A navy blue straw, drooping shape, large satin rose at front, with wreath of apples in dark shade of shot silk is a very effective combination.

A turban, rather higher at the front is of Georgette crepe in pretty shade black satin, gold and black embroidery trimming.

One of Belgian blue, simply tailored, a daisy in corn color and leaves at left side is a chic and becoming style.

A nigger brown satin and rose, stove pipe crown, narrow brim trimmed with narrow band of ribbon in chinese colouring of Jade Green.

A charming combination of green and rose, drooping shape, liere and straw braid in bronze hand painted trimming which will be popular, was very much admired.

Another is a turban, set-in crown of rich shades in Tapestry silk ornaments in shades of old rose and green embroidery.

Very noticeable, a black liere with graceful sweeping brim, faced with georgette crepe. The inverted quill adds a smart touch with its pretty curves.

A large hat in white silk ribbon top, medallion effect, pink roses and variegated leaves, faced with pink.

Misses and childrens hats this season are simple and prettily designed in the newest and smartest colorings.

Cook & Fox

At Cook & Fox millinery parlors charming new styles were also displayed. A smart looking hat shown was a large sailor of Chinese yellow silk, touches of yellow embroidered on black and two narrow velvet bands around the crown.

Another pretty creation was of green ribbon, stitches of gold through ribbon and buckle of tiny yellow rose buds facing of green, stove pipe crown, rim slightly drooped.

A rolled shape, chin chin style, rose bud crown over pink crepe, the brim of silver lace and faced, with pink crepe was very artistic.

A dress hat in delicate shades of pink, lavender and green, silver lace in shot effect with narrow rim of gold lace. The only ornament a single pink satin rose, was very much admired.

A large corn color crepe, portrait style, with an ornament of forget-me-nots in blue with binding of blue velvet was effective.

Oriental ornaments, and the colorings this season from soft shades in grays to the more vivid shades of red, green and yellow will be worn.

Several hundred thousand bushels of high-grade seed oats have been gathered by the Department of Agriculture ready for spring sowing by Ontario and Quebec farmers.

Manchurian, Ottawa 50, Barley (Experimental Farm Note)

This six-row barley is a selection made several years ago by the Dominion Experiment Station from the old, commercial sort, Meunier, which has been favourably known in Canada for a long time and has been successfully grown in very many districts.

As the tests in regard to yield are still in progress, final conclusions cannot yet be drawn; but it may be stated that the new selection appears to be, for many reasons of this country, the most productive barley known among those sorts which have fairly satisfactory straw.

The straw of this barley is of good length and strength, as compared with other popular six-row sorts; but it should be emphasised that even the best barleys have a tendency to lodge when sown on rich soil, in seasons when moisture is plentiful. The heads of this variety are exceptionally long and heavy, and here, in perhaps, lies the secret of its large yield. In very high winds it does not behave quite so well as some of the other sorts as it shows tendency for the heads to break off at the base, and for the kernels to thresh out on the ground. However, these objections, though worth considering in wind-swept prairie districts, are of no importance in most localities.

The foliage is good and the plants are not particularly liable to attacks of rust. They will withstand a reasonable amount of drought and will grow well on a great variety of soils. It should be remembered, however, that, as a rule, barley does not succeed on soils which are badly in need of lime. While it is early in ripening—like nearly all barleys of the class—it does not mature exceptionally early, being perhaps a trifle later than the average.

The awns of this barley adhere some what firmly, so that, for best results, it should be in thoroughly dry condition when threshed. The grain is of a very good yellowish colour, and quite free from the objectionable greenish or bluish tinge which lessens the value of some barleys for exhibition purposes.

Considering all its characteristics, Manchurian Ottawa 50 is recommended by the Dominion Experiment Station as the best variety of six-row barley for nearly all parts of Canada, except those districts where destructive winds are to be feared about harvest time.

WEDDING BELLS

MA-CONNELL-HARTT

A pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. Nicholas Hartt, Deputy Reeve of Murray, on Wednesday, March 7th, when his only daughter, Marjorie Frances, was united in marriage to Mr. Arthur H. MacConnell, of Spring Brook.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Canon Armstrong in the presence of a large assembly of friends, little Helen Bateman, cousin of the groom and daintily attired in blue silk acted as flower girl. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in a gown of ivory crepe de chine and nines, and tulle veil wreathed with orange blossoms.

Mr. Clayton Maguire played the wedding march, and during the signing of the register, Mrs. Larry Laird, sister of the groom, sang, "I love you truly."

Following the ceremony a delectable wedding breakfast was served, Mr. and Mrs. MacConnell leaving shortly afterwards for Toronto and Hamilton. The bride was the recipient of many useful and beautiful gifts. The groom's gift to the bride being a pendant of amethyst and pearls and to the flower girl a signet ring.

Life in German Prisons

give away the soldier and got two months' imprisonment—a short period of it—solitary confinement.

GOT SOME SYMPATHY

"The prison commandant, I must say, was a most considerate man, and treated us all as well as he could. I imagine he sympathized with me for shielding a soldier. He was a soldier himself. Even the German soldiers are not all bad, by any means. When my term was up the internment camp refused to have me back, as they declared I would start sending out clandestine letters again, and as the prison was done with me, they decided I might as well go back to England."

"And how is the food situation in Germany?" asked the interviewer. "As bad as this said."

FOOD PRICES HIGH

"Quite, I should say. The populace are at a very low ebb for foodstuffs. I have seen butter sold at four shillings a pound, bacon at 10 shillings, condensed milk at 2 and 6 pence a small tin, and that almost unobtainable luxury, white bread, from Denmark—and only a four pound loaf at that—sold for six shillings. And there was keen competition to buy. Without food parcels, I simply couldn't have lived. The rations issued by the Germans are awful. Our prison guards got only coffee and black bread and soup of a kind that you wouldn't set before pigs in England or Canada. The ordinary German people are really on a starvation diet."

"But they claim the army are still well-fed, don't they?"

"That is what is being told the German people, and being very credulous, they believe it. As a matter of fact the army are very short, too. Leaving the country, I went under military escort to Berlin, and on the way opened a parcel from home. The German soldier with me expressed great astonishment at sight of a white bread sandwich, with meat. 'But how do you get such things from England?' asked he. 'I thought England was starving—and white bread!' He gladly accepted a sandwich, and told me that up where he had been on an active part of the front the troops only got meat twice a week. They went into action and came out again on frugal fare of black bread and coffee."

"Are the Germans still confident of victory?"

They pretend to be—largely because they are so deluded by false reports concerning the situation of the allied countries. One German officer I met on my way out of Germany told me that he expected the war to last another eighteen months, and that if Germany could, as she would, hold out till harvest, all would be well in the food line. The army had the food situation completely in control. When I mentioned the possibility of a popular uprising from exasperation over the food shortage, he merely remarked that there were still plenty of machine guns left to turn on the mob if necessary.

REJOICED OVER LUSITANIA

My informant was a captive at Ruhleben when the Lusitania was sunk. Five times did the Germans hoist a flag in exultation at the infamous deed. And five times was that flag cut down by the prisoners. Each time the members of the prison barracks guilty were shut up for forty-eight hours in their horse stalls. At Ruhleben, where he was captain of the sanitarium, Mr. Mellor often saw Mr. Gerard, the United States Ambassador, who believed from the beginning that sooner or later there would be a rupture between the States and Germany but he declared that he thought it would never come to actual war.

A HERO'S DEATH

Here, too, did Mellor see Captain Freyatt led away to his death. "Good-bye, bye, you will never see me again," had been that brave man's parting words. Though Capt. Freyatt was foully murdered and accused of being a franc tireur (a civilian fighting illegitimately), the Germans inconsistent even in their outrages, imprisoned his crew as prisoners of war, with other soldiers and sailors. Rules at Ruhleben and other camps are very harsh. Sharp punishments attend the smallest offences. For instance, smoking a cigarette in a building after 7 o'clock gets the offender three days cells.

This record breaking heifer has been milked ever since she started to give milk the first time with an "Empire" and with each test she has bettered her previous record, which proves conclusively that the most valuable cows can be and are being milked with an Empire machine.

G. A. Brethen, Norwood, officially tested a three-year-old that milked 103.7 milk per day, 33 lbs. butter 7 days. This is another Canadian Record for age. Mr. Brethen is greatly enthused over the testing with his Empire Milker.

How to Make Wax to Graft Fruit Trees

Orchardists who expect to graft apple trees this spring will find the following formula for grafting wax, recommended by the Ohio Experiment Station, satisfactory: Melt together until thoroughly mixed four pounds of resin, two pounds of bees wax and a pound of tallow. Pour this mixture into a vessel of cold water. Grease the hands with tallow, and when the wax is cool pull it like taffy until it becomes light and smooth. It may then be shaped into balls or sticks, and will keep indefinitely in a cool place. Paraffine substituted for beeswax makes a harder as well as a cheaper wax.

Recruits Wanted for Production

Just as surely as lack of food is strangling Germany day by day, so plenty of food is winning the victory for the allies. The French armies, for instance, were never better fed than now, for France cannot forget the awful lesson of 1870—the failure of her food supply. To this she attributed the loss of that war.

To feed the French soldiers around Verdun, more than 25,500,000 pounds of food a week were required. This gives a faint idea of the colossal task of feeding an army. Canada and Britain have a huge army of fighting heroes on the line; every man must have plenty of food, in spite of a world shortage. Upon Canada's food production all principally rely.

The Farmers of Ontario Urgently Need Help

The Department of Agriculture appeals to men and boys to enlist in the farm help campaign. The Department appeals to men unfit for military service, or who find it impossible to enlist in the army. Do your "bit" by helping to increase production of foodstuffs. This is your hour of opportunity.

The farmers of Ontario need the help of retired farmers, of men following no occupation (retired), of business men who can spare a portion of their time. We appeal to all who can so arrange their ordinary affairs to plan to help some farmer friend, particularly in seed time and harvest.

Stirling Girl Wins Prize

Miss Helena Morton, of Stirling has been awarded a prize in the Daily News Contest. The prize stories of the Kindness circle were on "Scatter Seeds of Kindness." Below is the story.

Scatter Seeds of Kindness
By Helena Morton, of Stirling, age 11.
Our motto is "Scatter Seeds of Kindness." What does it mean? Somewhat the same as the little verse which says: "Do all the good you can, In all the ways you can, To all the people you can, Just as long as you can."

Will I begin at the first and tell you what the motto means? Scatter means to spread it all over, far and wide, to everyone. You must not wait to be asked to do a kindness, you must be ready to do it when your turn comes. Seeds of kindness mean little, little parts of a kindness, and often big plants grow from a small seed. The stately oak grows from a tiny acorn. So if you do tiny bits of kindness to some one, soon they might begin to do kindnesses too, and those whom they are kind to, would likely be kind to someone else, and so it goes on from one person to another, making many people happy all because you have done some little kind deed to someone.

It is the little bits of kindness that count. If you do a big kindness once in a while, it is not nearly so great a blessing as if you did smaller kindnesses all the time. After school there is lots of time to help other people instead of always thinking about yourself. You could miss a few sleigh rides down hill to go and help an old woman carry a pail of water. If you saw that old woman carrying a heavy pail of water, which is almost bending her double, you would feel you should help her. If you helped her you would feel very happy, and none the worse for losing a ride. Even days when you can't go out there is a place to scatter seeds of kindness. What about mother? You can save her many weary steps by looking after baby, running upstairs for her or helping with the meals and dishes. Kindness Circle friends, there are many ways in which you can scatter seeds of kindness.

QUEEN TOOK ONTARIO GIFT

FARM FAMILY SENT JAM

(Toronto Evening Telegram.)

Belike, the little cut-glass jam dishes which grace the afternoon tea table at Buckingham Palace have been filled of late with a new delicacy—tasty, home-made Canadian preserves, gift to Queen Mary from a warm-hearted Canadian farmer's wife. Doubtless long since the Royal Family have enjoyed the flavor of this preserved fruit. But more keen still will have been their appreciation of the unique illuminated and also home-made address which accompanied the fruit. Safe to say their Majesties, Princess Mary and the young Princess have never seen anything of that kind quite like it.

PROCESSES OF MANUFACTURE

A trolley maple leaf, deftly gilded on silver, the cover of the little book containing the address. By turning over the pages of this brochure the Royal recipients are able to view the process whereby the jam was prepared. There, on the first page, snapped by the kodak, stand ma and pa, the children and the hired girl, in front of the old farmhouse down on the "steenth" concession. The orchard and garden whence came those luscious bottled plums, those mellow pears, those delicately flavored strawberries and black currants, looms in the background.

Mary Anne, stirring the boiling fruit which bubbles in a huge iron preserving kettle on the kitchen stove, forms the subject of another picture, while the farmer's wife, busy sealing jars, and the farmer himself in shirt-sleeves packing the jars for their long journey to Buckingham Palace, each appear in turn in the illustrations. That there should be no confusion among the Royal Family as to just who the various people are, a little key marked "A," "B," "C," etc., is set in a margin of the booklet, giving the names and processes.

THE ADDRESS

But more interesting still is the address itself. As your correspondent obtained the whole story in a roundabout way from a person outside the Canadian Red Cross he cannot quote the address verbatim, nor even vouch for its approximate correctness, though he understands that the tenor of the missive was somewhat as follows:—

"Your Majesty, Dear Queen:—We would be very pleased if you and the King and the Royal Family would try some of our real home-made Canadian jam. You will like it far better than the canned stuff they dish out at the factories. Us folks have been trying to do our bit by making jam for the soldiers, and I guess they don't find it hard to take up there in the trenches. Thought maybe you would like to see just how we make it, so here are some snaps, my daughter took with the kodak."

RED TAPE TO BE CUT

Several weeks ago the box containing this jam arrived along with piles of other parcels for the Canadian Red Cross, London. The box was merely addressed "Canadian Red Cross, Cockspar St., London." Great was the surprise, therefore, or the Canadian lady workers who were opening it down at the Customs House when they came upon the little booklet attached to tucked away on top of the jars.

Here was a quandary. Perhaps it is not generally known, but Royalty never accepts gifts promiscuously. Many a handsome present to the King or Queen is sent away—returned to the donor with a brief note to this effect. People are constantly trying to give things to Royalty. Tailors, jewellers, furriers, etc., etc., for business purposes, would be only too glad to have it known that they had had their wares accepted as presents by members of the reigning house. That would be a good advertisement. People other than tradesmen, too, have been just as keen, often seeking some favor or advantage in return. Naturally, it would never do for the Sovereign to be under obligations to anyone. Thus an adamantine rule has been made and the gifts of well-meaning mortals share the fate of those from toils.

MISTAKEN IDEA

Now here be it said, that people in Canada have too often regarded the Canadian Red Cross as a common carrier, which it is not, and sent parcels with the request that the Red Cross forward them to various addresses, which it is not supposed to do. This practice has caused much trouble and delay to all concerned. The Queen's parcel was just such a case in point, though in this instance the Red Cross were only too glad to be of assistance. But how?

In their dilemma they wrote to the Queen's secretary, Sir Edward Wallington, enclosing the booklet, with the photos and address, asking for instructions.

COULDN'T RESIST

On seeing the address her Majesty was immensely pleased. The originality of the gift, and above all, the genuine kindness of the farmer's wife and mother which prompted it touched Queen Mary deeply. The blunt, friendly words of the letter, the human touch of those homely little snapshots from a far-off Canadian farm, all rang so true. They struck a responsive chord in the heart of the wife and mother who shares Britain's imperial throne.

By all means she would accept the jam. For once would the hard and fast rule go into abeyance. Her Majesty declared she would be delighted to take the present, and gave orders that her thanks be conveyed through the Canadian Red Cross to the Canadian farmer's wife.

JAM WAS DELAYED

Accordingly, the Red Cross officials instructed that the box, still at the customs house (for anything containing sugar is liable to duty on entering England) should be sent on forthwith to Queen Mary at Buckingham Palace. Two weeks passed by, and the busy Red Cross people had forgotten all about the incident, when one morning the telephone bell rang in the sanctum at Cockspar street, and Sir Edward Wallington's voice sounded over the wire. He wanted to know what had become of the jam. Her Majesty had been looking forward to it, but so far no sign of the box.

DEMANDED THE DUTY

Inquiry at the customs house elicited the fact that, notwithstanding the request, the box was still there. Forsooth, it had not paid duty, and, according to the law could not be delivered to even its august addressee, the first lady in the land, without preliminary collection of the tolls. Followed some telephonic argument, in which the Red Cross expostulated at the delay, and declared their readiness to have paid had they known—their desire then to pay the few shillings due, and have the jam delivered at once.

'Twas then the watch dogs of the public purse became more generous, and, expressing regret that her Majesty had been kept waiting, magnanimously refused to make any charge whatsoever.

An hour or so later the box, having passed the scrutiny of the Guards' sentry at Buckingham back gate, was motored up, and received by a liveried servant, who, checking it off on a list, had it deposited with a pile of other groceries in the Royal pantry.

When it was learned that Major Darius Green was returning from the front and would visit Stirling, his old home town the members of the Council, High School Cadets, the local platoon of the 254th together with the citizens gathered at the station on Saturday evening and gave him a hearty welcome. A torch light procession formed at the station and escorted Major Green through the town.

For years he was Capt. of No. 2 Co. of the 49th. He enlisted with the 39th Battalion and after going overseas qualified as Major.

About a year ago he went in the trenches and received a severe shock from a bursting shell which buried him in the earth. He was invalided home and expects to report at Kingston for duty shortly. Grand Finale to the Evangelistic ServicesSoul Stirring Sermons by the Evangelist G. M. Sharpe

On Monday last the Stirling Methodist church was the scene of a large gathering of men, women and children, who had met for the farewell services of Mr. and Mrs. Sharpe.

After some weeks of careful preparation planned by the pastor, Rev. A. J. Terrill and his committee, Mr. Sharpe began an open campaign on Sunday, March 4th, in the Methodist church at 10.30 a. m. The first hymn sung was, "We're Marching to Zion." The Evangelist commenced by answering some of the questions which would naturally arise in the minds of a new people as to his age, whether married, etc. etc. His first text was "We Would See Jesus."

Mr. Sharpe has a way, all his own, of presenting the truth, in modern language and manner, interspersed with illustrations emphasizing the point, and making his thoughts simple and clear and attractive to both old and young, educated and uneducated. Throughout he revealed the spirit of a readiness of self in his earnestness to present the truth, as it is in Christ, and many hearing and listening accepted. The hymns that were used had a large part in the work and Mr. Sharpe used his good voice and talent in leading the choir and inducing all to sing.

On the first Sunday afternoon there was a men's mass meeting and in the evening the church was well-filled with people from all directions, the evangelist being well-known having laboured previously on the Ivanhoe and Rawdon circuits.

Sermons were held every evening of the week, Saturday excepted and were well attended.

Sunday, March 11, brought Mrs. Sharpe who addressed a woman's mass meeting in the Sunday School room. Mr. Sharpe addressing the men in the auditorium his subject being "How the Red Horse won the Race" and Mrs. Sharpe "Better have Miss on your tombstone than Mary the Wrong Man."

Mrs. Sharpe is of an amiable disposition and graceful manners, which appeal especially to the women, and her thoughtfulness for the welfare of others has endeared her to all. Particularly is she so earnest in presenting the message she bears, and persuading others to walk in the true and right way of freedom and liberty in Jesus Christ.

Mrs. Sharpe had to return home to Galt, but came back again for the last Friday evening, Sunday and Monday. On Sunday afternoon she again addressed the women and girls and the Sunday School room, and class-rooms being crowded to the utmost. Mr. Sharpe addressed the men presenting the word in a way strong and fearless meeting the needs of all.

On Monday morning of the closing day people came early and brought their baskets and after a short service had lunch in the basement of the church and after an afternoon service had their tea there. A goodly number from Rawdon, some from Sidney, West Huntingdon, Ivanhoe and the village made up a friendly bunch for tea.

The evening service was necessarily long, there needing to be so much said before the sermon. The donation to Mr. and Mrs. Sharpe was $800.

Too much? Well how many of you men have worked as hard or done as much good for $800? Mr. Sharpe is doing a good work, but the time is bound to come when not only his mental strength but his physical strength will be broken down, and what will be his portion then?

The offerings were from people from all over the country. The majority amounted to from $2 to $5, some $5 and one donation of $10.

By request Mr. and Mrs. Sharpe sang, for the second or third time, "The old account was settled long ago," and thanked their friends for their kindness to them and for the generous free-will offering. Mr. Sharpe thanked Mr. Terrill for his help, saying that he had a warm cozy corner in his heart for him, which he would continue to keep warm; the choir for the efficient and cheerful way in which they had helped him; the janitor for his great part and his patience; the ushers for the pleasant welcoming to all and their endeavor to seat everyone comfortably, though that was impossible for scores of people had to stand up throughout the long service; Mrs. W. S. Martin for the way she had assisted at the piano, not having been asked once, the men's mass meeting excepted. He spoke very warmly and sincerely of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Ashley and daughter Bessie—not only as having given him a good board house, but for the "little home" they had made for him while in their midst. Though at such a late hour the sermon on "Can any Good Thing come out of Stirling?" was preached with such earnestness and convincing power that many wishing to connect with their intention to follow the Saviour of mankind.

The Rev. Mr. Reddick, Rev. Mr. Bick and Rev. Mr. Neal were present and each took part in the meeting. After the service closed many went up to bid farewell to Mr. and Mrs. Sharpe and to tell them that had it not been for their help they might never have decided for Christ.

Next Sunday morning and evening the Rev. H. M. Manning, of Oshawa will be at the Methodist Church and assist at the Reception Service for those wishing to connect with the said church. Mr. Sharpe said many times that he was not working to make denominationalists out of any one but was seeking to make Christians. He hoped everyone would link up with some church, for one cannot thrive long in the faith without the influence of some Christian Church.

The total expenses for the campaign were $225 and were fully met by the plate offerings taken at the church. 265 people conscious of their sins sought peace with God.

There was a meeting of the congregation in the Methodist church on Wednesday evening at 7.30.

There will be a banquet for all the Methodist converts and the old choir

Canadian Woods Best

for Building

"Canadian Woods for Structural Timbers" is the title of a bulletin (No. 53) just issued by the Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior. This bulletin shows as the result of hundreds of tests that several of our native woods are cheaper and better, as structural timbers, than woods which Canadians have been importing for some years. This is gratifying and satisfactory as regards both home and foreign trade in timber. It means much to Canada in war time, as the development of our resources enables us to carry on the campaign effectively. Citizens who are interested may receive a copy of this bulletin free upon application to the Director of Forestry, Ottawa.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"He is—ahem!—certainly one of the most entertaining and—er—charming men I have ever met," says the rector, "and if—er—Signa had not been foolish enough to reject Sir Frederick for his sake, I should have liked him amazingly."

To-night, after the rector has drunk his one glass of port, and Hector has smoked his cigarette—which he is allowed to do under the veranda—he goes into the drawing room, and waiting until the couple are fast asleep, entices Signa into the open air.

"Well, sir," she says, nestling up to him as he draws the white, fleecy shawl round her, "what is it? Do you want to smoke or what?"

"I want to talk; but I can smoke as well, if I may," she says, and she lights a cigar, a special privilege permitted by Signa, who is wise enough to know that a cigar is the one rival which a woman need never fear, and who likes the scent of a fine Havana in the evening air; though, as a matter of truth, she would declare she liked better the ranket of tobacco if her god happened to be partial to it.

"Signa," he says, putting his arm round her under pretence of drawing the shawl closer, "I have come to make a business proposal."

"I can't talk business with your arm around me, sir," she murmurs, naively. "You should hand me to a seat, and stand with your hands behind you."

He laughs.

"I can talk better like this Signa, we have been so hard at work on behalf of other people that we have had no time to think of ourselves lately. Let us do so to-night. How should you like to be married this day month?"

Signa starts and draws a long breath, then she flushes a deep red, and tries to put him at arms' length.

"Not at all," she says, tremulously.

"No? Then say this day fortnight?"

"Oh, Hector! How foolish!"

"This day week, then?" he says, drawing her to him.

"This day—five years!" she says, with bowed head and flushed face. "Will not that do?"

"It certainly will not!" he says, "Listen, Signa, if—if you are quite sure—"

"Quite sure?" she echoes, softly, her violet eyes raised to his.

"Quite sure that you would not repent—that you love me well enough to trust me—marry me in a month from now. There, darling! I meant to break it to you, as all bad news should be broken, but it has slipped out. This day month!"

"Oh! Is it so soon. Why—why—cannot you wait longer?"

"No longer, darling! Even that seems ages off. I shall count every day until the day arrives! Why should you not, Signa? You don't repent, do you? You are still sure that you do not regret? Blythe Park—"

"Isn't it rather chilly," I think I will go in," she says.

"Forgive me, darling!" he murmurs, holding her tightly. "But it seems so much, all that you are giving me."

ing up! Well, I won't touch on that subject again. I will accept it that you prefer the modest, Hector Warren to Sir Frederick Blythe, and that you will become the pauper's bride in a month."

"Must I?" she whispers. "I—I thought—"

"That, like Jacob, I was going to wait seven years, perhaps," he says, laughing softly. "Why, do you know, I thought I was wonderfully considerate in giving you so long, but I remembered that ladies required at least a month to get their wedding finery."

Signa laughs.

"My wedding finery will be but a poor display."

"A clean cotton gown is all I stipulate for," he says, "on condition that I may dispense with the awful blue, shiny frock coat which is considered as antimacassar—I beg pardon—I will don't refuse me! I have a special reason for asking you."

"If you wish it," she says, with another long breath. But it is dreadfully short. What will Aunt Podswell say?"

"She will groan and sigh, and sniff, and frown," he says, smiling. "And the rector will cough and rub his chin—poor Mr. Podswell, it is an awful disappointment for him! never mind; I am not to mention that."

odious subject, am I? Just thirty-one days, and you will be my own! It seems too sweet to be true!"—and he takes her face in his hands, and turns it so that he can look at it with passionate wistfulness.

"Is it so sweet?" she interposes, with lowered eyes.

He does not answer her, and his face grows pale, as if with some passing thought.

"Heaven! how women can trust!" he murmurs.

"Trust!" she says, with gentle wonder.

"Yes, yes," he says, almost to himself. "Are you not trusting all your future life in me—to me who am not worthy to touch the hem of your dress!—to me of whom you know nothing?"

She smiles.

"Know nothing? Why, it is, oh, ages since we met there down by the sea. Know nothing. It seems to me as if I had known you all my life. Why is that?"

"Don't ask me," he says, still pale and troubled. "Your pure and stainless love overcame me. There, there! you don't understand; but oh, my darling, if you knew how precious your love is to me!—how I treasure your sweet innocence and trustfulness! Ah, Signa, my own, own darling, if a lifelong devotion can prove my love for you, you shall learn what love is."

And in the intensity of his emotion he drops his arm and moves away from her.

Half-frightened, Signa sinks into a chair, and he takes a turn or two on the terrace. Then he comes back to her, with the dark cloud dispersed from his brow, and bends over her.

"Signa," he says, "have you noticed that I have not made you a single present, not even the regulation on-going which the happy lover generally places upon his betrothed's finger?"

She looks up at him with a smile.

"Have you not? I never thought of it."

"Not even a ring?" he says. "And I will not give you one until I can give you a plain hoop of gold. But I must give you something, Signa."

"Give me your love," she says, looking up into his eyes, steadily.

"You have that already," he returns almost solemnly. "But see, here is something else," and he draws a long, blue envelope from his pocket and tucks it in his finger. "It is not so pretty as a ring, is it?"

Signa smiles with amused surprise.

"What is it?" she asks.

"I cannot tell you just now," he says, waving the blue envelope up and down, gently. "But I want you to take it tonight as my wedding or betrothal gift. Will you do so?"

Signa holds out her hands and he gives her the packet.

"You are not to open it," he says, smiling thoughtfully, "until after we are married, or—er—he pauses, then smiles again, lightly—"unless any thing happens to me."

"Happens to you?" with a sudden gravity.

He laughs.

"Yes, I mean in case I should—should—well, slip down the steps on my way home on a break my neck."

"Hector!"

He laughs.

"Of course I am joking, Signa," he says, apologetically. "But—this is business, you know in case anything should happen to me before you are my very own, then you are to open this, you understand?"

Signa holds the big envelope at arm's length.

"I understand," she says. "But had—had you better keep it?" and she laughs.

"No," he says, echoing her laugh; "it is yours, absolutely. It is very ugly, isn't it? Never mind. I will see if I Signa laughs.

"Ah, you are making fun of me!" she says.

"No, I am quite serious," he says, but with a happy smile. "Put the ugly blue envelope in your pocket, if you have one."

"I haven't," she admits, piteously; "but I can hide it away. And I am not to open it on the subject. You see, I could have had a title, or something like it, with the whole two hundred, for everybody was anxious to come. Why, the dear old duchess—how I do hate that woman!—actually drove over to call on me the other day, and she hasn't been near me for a year! But, if we had kept it amongst the Olympians, it would have been cold and stiff; and Laura doesn't want that. You see it is a bit of fun!"

ment would be formally announced on the evening of the ball. Not a few raised the voice of censure, and hinted that the whole thing was irregular and scarcely—well, proper; but no one refused the invitation on that account, and those who had not received tickets strove, almost madly, to procure one.

In all, about two hundred were invited—a larger number than Lady Rookwell quite approved of; but Laura Derwent had written to inquire the size of the ballroom and ante-room, and had told Lady Rookwell to fill them. "They will want airing," she had said; "and as every one who doesn't get a card will be your and my mortal enemy, we had better make as few as possible." For days Lady Rookwell had been busy in the preparation of her list, and when it was completed it showed a catalogue of guests which contained the elite of an aristocratic district, with a sprinkling of the upper middle-class, such as the Jenks and the local professional men, with their wives. Altogether, Lady Rookwell was rather proud of her list.

"It will be a success, my dear," she said to Signa, to whom she confided all her ideas on the subject. "You see, I could have had a title, or something like it, with the whole two hundred, for everybody was anxious to come. Why, the dear old duchess—how I do hate that woman!—actually drove over to call on me the other day, and she hasn't been near me for a year! ## MARCH WEATHER RHEUMATIC WEATHER

VICTIMS CAN CURE THEMSELVES WITH DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

With the coming of March people who are afflicted with rheumatism begin to have unpleasant reminders of their trouble. The weather is changeable—balm and springing colds, raw, cold and stormy weather. It is such sudden changes of weather that sets the pangs and tortures of rheumatism, lumbago and sciatica going. But it must be borne in mind that although weather conditions start the pains, the trouble is deeply rooted in the blood, and can only be cured through the blood. All the lotions and liniments in the world can't cure rheumatism. Rubbing may seem to ease the pain while you are rubbing, but there its value ends. Only through the blood can you cure rheumatism. That's why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have so many thousands of cures of this trouble to their credit. The new, rich blood which they actually make drives the poisonous acid and rheumatism is vanquished. Among many sufferers from rheumatism who have been cured by this medicine is Mr. C. H. McGee, freight shed foreman for the G. T. R. at Peterboro, who says: "In the course of my work I am naturally exposed to all kinds of weather, with the result that about two years ago I contracted rheumatism which settled in my legs. At times I could scarcely walk, and often had to quit my work, owing to the stiffness and the pain. I tried different remedies without getting any help until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I used six boxes of these and can say that I am about as well as ever. I want to tell the pills occasionally, and I hope that my experience may be of benefit to some other rheumatic sufferer. I no longer suffer from rheumatism, or any other disease of the blood, and I begin to cure myself to-day with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont."

be present. If he should be, he would of course be there, in his own house, as a guest. The whole thing is romantic in the extreme, and society is in Miss Derwent's debt for a really substantial sensation. We may add that N—'s orange is one of the finest specimens of the old-fashioned county 'pieces' that still exist, and it has been long a source of regret in the county that so large and handsome a house should have been closed and neglected."

"Isn't it shameful?" exclaims her ladyship again. "What is the world coming to? You see, they don't dare to print Lord Delamere's name in full, or the house, but they don't hesitate to do so with Laura's name. That's what it is to be a professional beauty; and last week they even hinted in this paper that she and he were engaged."

"Perhaps they are," says Signa, with a smile.

"Of course not! My dear, it is impossible. She only saw the man for an hour or two. Oh, no; if they were engaged, or there was any likelihood, she wouldn't have gone in for this absurd business. Isn't your young man very late? And she looks at the clock.

Signa colors faintly; she has looked at the clock a dozen times in the last two minutes.

do at the Grange, and he was kept, 'Yes; but there was a great deal to perhaph do."

"He has worked like a navvy," says Lady Rookwell. "If Laura does her duty, she will go down on her knees to him!"

"I don't think he'd care about that," laughed Signa.

"And your dress, how about that?" asks Lady Rookwell. "I declare we have none of us given a thought to that! And you, like the idiotic, unselfish child that you are, never mentioned it."

"Oh, my dress is all right," says Signa, leaning back and resting her shapely head in her hands. "I shall wear my Egyptian gauze—I haven't any other—and, quickly, for she sees something hovering on the old lady's line, 'I should prefer it to anything else.'"

"Well, you are right there, my dear," responds Lady Rookwell, concisely; "it is more distinguished and uncommon looking than anything you could get in London—or Paris, either. Hem!"

She puts her hand to her lips, frowns, then leaves the room. When she comes back she has an ohlong morocca case in her hand, and pushes it across to Signa with a matter-of-fact air.

"That's all for you, my dear," she says, as if she were passing her a newspaper or some such trifle. "Wear them to-morrow, and keep them in memory of a disagreeable old woman who was stupid enough to be fond of you."

Signa opens the case and utters a low exclamation, as she sees, reposing in the ruby velvet, a suit of magnificent diamonds and pearls.

"Oh, Lady Rookwell!" she says, with a tone of awe and dismay, but with the light which naturally comes into every girl's eyes at the sight of pretty things. "But—but—"

"Now don't be ungrateful," says the old lady, very brusquely; "for it would be ungrateful to refuse them I should never forgive you, I shouldn't, indeed."

Signa gets up and crosses over to her and kisses her, which is a great thing for Signa to do, for she is not free with her kisses save to one favored individual.

"I was going to refuse them," she says in a low voice, "but I wish they weren't so—so very valuable, as I know they must be."

"Tush! What's the matter?" retorts her ladyship. "Valuable as they may be, they are of no use to me; I should never wear them; besides I've got too many baubles of the same sort; poor Rookwell was fond of decking me out like an Indian idol. I don't think he ever went to London without bringing me something of the kind. They used to love him at Howell & James' like a brother. I think they'll look nice on your gauze, dear. You can wear that flower spray in your hair. Let me put it—oh! here's one who will do it better!" she breaks off, as Hector Warren enters.

Quite Different.

A tenant of Lord Halketown, a judge of the Scotch court of sessions, once waited on him with a useful recommendation and said: "My lord, I am come to inform your lordship of a sad misfortune. My cow has gored one of your lordship's cows, and I fear it cannot live." "Well, then, of course, you must pay for it," "Indeed, my lord, it was not my fault, and you know I am but a very poor man." "I can't help that. The law says you must pay for it. I am not to lose my cow, am I?" "Well, my lord, if it must be so I cannot say more. But I forgot what I was saying. It was my mistake entirely. I should have said it was your lordship's cow that gored mine!" "Oh, is that it? That's quite a different affair. Go along and don't trouble me just now. I am very busy. Be off!" says the American Law Review.

"So you are a strong advocate of love in a cottage, eh?" sneered the suburban "Squire. There's no fault to consider," replied the sophisticated apartment house dweller.

Experiments With Flax For Fibre At Ottawa

Experimental Farms Note
During the year 1915 a number of plots of flax were grown at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, the seed having been obtained from Holland. The samples were pulled at various stages of ripeness, rotted under water, and after wards, scutched by the Ontario Flax Co., Ltd. They were valued by an expert of the York St. Flax Spinning Co., Belfast, Ireland, but in no case could any of the samples be pronounced first class. This was partly due to their being insufficiently rotted, but might also have been caused partly by the time of sowing, by the character of the season, and by the stage of ripeness when pulled. Accordingly, a number of experiments were planned for the ensuing year, 1916, to clear up some of the doubtful points and to determine—in so far as this was possible—in a single year—whether the highest grade of fibre-flax could be successfully grown in Canada.

The seed used in 1916 was harvested from some of the plots sown with Dutch seed in 1915. The rate of sowing per acre varied between 14 bushels and 23 bushels of seed germinating 100 per cent.
This means that where it was decided to sow 2 bushels per acre of seed with a germination of 100 per cent. and the sample of seed available gave, when tested, a germination of 96 per cent, it was necessary to sow a somewhat higher quantity than 2 bushels of the latter—as a matter of fact, 2 1/2 bushels.

As very early sowing is an important factor in achieving success should the summer turn out to be unusually dry (as actually happened in 1916), seven plots were sown on the 28th of April, one on the 28th of April and seven on the 12th of May.

The soil was a heavy clay and at the first date of sowing was rather wet, consequently it was decided to make several shallow trenches about six inches deep between some of the plots. For several weeks after sowing wet weather continued with very little interruption, and the system of surface trenches undoubtedly saved the situation.

The crop was pulled on various dates between the 14th of July and the 27th of July, the capsules being fully grown. In some cases the seeds were pale in colour and unripe; in others the plot was pulled when the first seeds on each plant were ripe; in those pulled last about half the seeds were ripe.

The average height of the seven plots first sown was 30 1/2 in. and the average of the last seven was 29 in.

The flax was put into water on the same day on which it was pulled, and was allowed to remain immersed from 3 to 3 1/2 days. It was then taken out and spread on the grass for a period of 1 to 2 days. The scutching was done by the same firm as in 1915; and the final report, made by the same gentleman who examined the previous year's crop, was as follows:—

"The flax is a good length, well retted, and strong. It is the best flax I have seen in Canada yet. According to flax values here it should be worth 40c. a pound or more."

THIS WORLD CROWDED?

Why, Lake Champlain, Frozen, Would Easily Hold All Its People.

There are on this globe about 1,500, 000,000 inhabitants. Most of us, who lack the sense of proportion, at the mention of this big number are apt to speak of the "overpopulation" of the world. Yet if we spare a few moments thought we shall better know what this represents. There is in my study a geographical globe about fifteen inches in diameter. On that sphere lakes is marked a little spot about the size of the point of a pencil—at any rate, so small as to make it impossible to write the initials of its name—Lake Champlain—upon it.

Yet whenever Lake Champlain freezes over there is good standing room for every one of all the inhabitants of the earth, and then this lake would be considerably less crowded than some of the busy streets of New York. Indeed, strange as it may sound, every one, young and old, would find about one square yard to stand upon.
Nay, more, if the very young and the very old would please to stand aside on the shores of the lake the remainder of the total inhabitants of the world could arrange a skating party where there would be less crowding than is seen on a busy winter day on that skating pond in New York's Central park.

Sketching the picture is like visualizing the great tragedy of the human race—the few people of this earth do not begin to realize their immense opportunities and their unused resources;
meanwhile they have the insane feeling that the world is "overpopulated."
All our science, our religion, our art have not given us common sense enough to learn how to use them to live comfortably and happily—we, this handful of inhabitants on this immense world of ours. Nor does it look as if we were going to get to our senses before many generations to come as long as we keep on muddling and blundering, as long as greed and vanity, lust for power, the main inheritance of the aims and thoughts of the past, together with some of our time honored traditions, keep us in the cold, relentless grip of bygone ages.—From "Renewing the Earth From the Air," by L. H. Baekeland, in Scribner's.

SENSE OF DIRECTION.

A Help in Finding Your Bearings at Night Without a Compass.

An English survivor of the South African war who was often sent on long distance night reconnaissances has worked out a system whereby any one can be right at home in the dark without compass or other instrument to aid the sense of direction. He worked out the exact movement and direction of the largest and most easily distinguished lights in the heavens so that the least scientific eye can recognize these signs by sight, and the whole dome of the heavens becomes a vast compass.

If there were five balloons or beacons placed in the heavens north, east, south and west it would be easy for any one to go in these directions by simply following the signs. Similarly, if one wished to go, say, a hand's breadth to the right or left of the beacons one could easily do so. The largest stars in the heavens can be depended upon in the same way.

"If you put the front buttons of your coat on the north star or other direction stars," writes this authority,
"your right and left breasts give you an angle of 45 degrees from the stars and your shoulders a right angle. Also, it is only a matter of a little practice to be able to measure 15 degrees of horizon with your hand, so you can get any number of degrees to the right or left of your direction stars, and after a little practice it becomes second nature to recognize the points of the compass at sight, and you acquire the same sense of direction as bushmen, Arabs and people who live far away from civilization."—Popular Science

Keep hens this year

EGG and poultry prices, the like of which have seldom or never been experienced, certainly make it worth anyone's while to start keeping hens. By doing so you have fresh eggs at the most trifling cost. At the same time you have the splendid satisfaction of knowing that you are doing something towards helping Britain, Canada
and the Allies achieve victory this year.

Increased production of food helps not only to lower the high cost of living, but it helps to increase the urgently needed surplus of Canada's food for export.
It saves money otherwise spent for eggs and poultry at high prices, and saves the labor of others whose effort is needed for more vital war work.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture will give every possible assistance by affording information about poultry keeping. Write for free bulletin which tells how to keep hens (address below).

Keep hens this year

EGG and poultry prices, the like of which have seldom or never been experienced, certainly make it worth anyone's while to start keeping hens. By doing so you have fresh eggs at the most trifling cost. At the same time you have the splendid satisfaction of knowing that you are doing something towards helping Britain, Canada
and the Allies achieve victory this year.

Increased production of food helps not only to lower the high cost of living, but it helps to increase the urgently needed surplus of Canada's food for export.
It saves money otherwise spent for eggs and poultry
at high prices, and saves the labor of others whose effort is needed for more vital war work.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture will give every possible assistance by affording information about poultry keeping. Write for free bulletin which tells how to keep hens (address below).

Dear Madam:— It has come to our notice that since the war commenced you have knitted one hundred and five pairs of socks for the gallant soldiers serving our empire. On behalf of the Canadian Red Cross Society I desire to first congratulate you upon having the will to perform this wonderful work and secondly upon having the knowledge and power to do it.

We are also informed that five of your grandsons are now serving in France. You surely must be a proud woman and we can only hope the lady will all come safely home again in due time. We are sorry that at the present time we have no means of recognizing such valuable services as you have given, after the war is over we hope to have some sort of pendant or badge for those who have done so much for the cause. If such is the case we shall be glad to see you receive one. Yours Sincerely, NOEL MARSHALL, Chairman Executive Committee.

We are now in a rest camp, but have oceans of work to do, however, we are able to purchase luxuries here that we could not think of, when in action.

The weather is very nice here the last few days and is drying the mud up very quickly, but of course there is no telling when it will begin to rain again.

I must close here, thanking you for your welcome parcel, and wishing you every success in your kind and patriotic work. I am, as ever,

TRY AGAIN TO SETTLE IRISH CASE

British Government Will Make Another Effort to End Troubles.

ULSTER IS WARNED

Bonar Law Says They Must Be Ready for Sacrifices.

London cable says: In the course of a debate in the House of Commons to-night on a resolution offered by Sir James Henry Duffell, Liberal, urging the Government to make another attempt to settle the Irish difficulty, Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced that the Government already had decided to make such an attempt. The Duffell motion was accordingly voted down. The Nationalists, considering that they had already stated their position, did not participate in the debate, which manifested a strong desire for a settlement on the part of all the Unionist and Liberal speakers, with one exception. The exception was Lord Hugh Cecil, who declined to believe that warlike was favorable to such an attempt.

The Duffell resolution urged the Government to take immediate steps to bring about a settlement of the Irish question. Sir James argued that Ireland was a weak spot in the great task before the country, and said he thought the Government ought to appoint a commission to endeavor to reach a settlement of the Home Rule question. Great Britain had entered the war for a scrap of paper, he added, but he was unable to forget the existence of an Irish scrap of paper, which was endorsed by the will of the British people.

It would be impossible for the Government to preserve with its motion to extend the life of the present Parliament, Sir James continued, if there was a solid body of opinion in the House of Commons against them, and every day's delay was recruiting a supporter to the physical force party in Ireland.

Ronald McNeill, Unionist member for Kent, on behalf of Ulster County, entered a strong protest against the suggestion of John Dillon, one of the Nationalist leaders, in the House on Tuesday night, that there had been negotiations between the Ulster leaders and Baron Kuhlmann. He declared that this was a trumped-up charge and that it would prove a great obstacle to a settlement of the Home Rule question. He further expressed the belief that the statement of the Dominions "would refuse to touch this Irish commission with a barge pole."

Mr. Bonar Law welcomed the tone of the debate. He declared that far from desiring a general election on the Irish question, as had been suggested, he would do just the opposite. The present situation, however, was a blemish on British statesmanship, besides being a handicap in carrying on the war. All parties agreed that it was impossible to impose a settlement on Ulster by force. The Government, the Chancellor continued, was anxious for a settlement, but sacrifices must be made on all sides. He hoped Ulster would prove less adamant and if the Nationalists would openly avow their readiness to act with the same spirit of the British parties the task would prove a much easier one.

"If we make another attempt and fail," said Mr. Bonar Law, "the position will be worse than we have decided in spite of the risk, that it is worth while for us who are responsible to make that attempt."

Mr. Bonar Law's announcement was received with loud cheering. "The House knows the difficulties, and therefore we will not press us for particulars, but will give us time for consideration."

Former Premier Asquith having expressed profound gratification at the announcement of the Chancellor, said: "I think it better to make the attempt and fail in now than to make it at all, and I am certain the Government will have not only the sympathy but the active co-operation of the whole House."

EX-EMPEROR IN PETROGRAD

London cable says: The former Emperor of Russia, Nicholas Romanoff, has arrived at the Tsarskoye Selo Palace, says a Reuter despatch from Petrograd.

"Alighting from the train at Tsarskoye Selo," says the correspondent, "Nicholas appeared calm, but was haggard. He wore the flowing uniform of the Sixth Kuban Regiment of Cossacks and a black bushy. Around his shoulders was a purple muffler, and he had a cross on his belt. Pinned on the breast of the former monarch was the Order of St. George. Nicholas was accompanied by Prince Dolgoroff.

"Nicholas was awakened while aboard his train at nine o'clock on Thursday morning, and entered the dining salon about ten o'clock. He invited his suite to have morning coffee with him and conversed with them for an hour. He then had breakfast with his suite and servants, kissing all of them. The servants kissed him on the shoulder. Addressing those about him, Nicholas said: "I thank you for your services, farewell."

The four commissioners from the Duma, whom the Government sent to Moltke to arrest the former Emperor, were received by General Alexi-off, to whom they showed their manifest. Their arrival caused no excitement at headquarters. Nicholas was aboard the Imperial train, where the Dowager Empress bade him farewell. General Alexi-off informed Nicholas of the commissioners' arrival, and he replied:

"I am ready to go anywhere, and submit to any decisions."

The various formalities occupied about an hour. Rear Admiral Nifoff wished to travel with the former Emperor, but the commissioners refused to permit him.

A stout crowd witnessed the departure of the train, which consisted of ten carriages, and a group of officers paid their respects to the former monarch.

The following statement was made by Grand Duke Nicholas, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian forces in the Caucasus, to the newspaper correspondents at his headquarters in Tiflis, Trans-Caucasia:

"A return to the old regime is impossible and I will never consent to such a retrograde step. I look forward to ultimate victory in the war, but a necessary condition, in the interval, is internal peace. I am sure the Government will be able to provide this, but only with the support of the people."

20 U. S. SAILORS WERE DROWNED

American Tanker Healdton
Torpedoed Unwarned

By German Sub. in North Sea, Consul Reports.

London cable says: Germany is believed to have added other American lives to her roster of death in her intensified submarine campaign. The American tanker steamer Healdton has been sunk to the bottom by a torpedo in the North Sea. One of the crew is known to have died in a small boat which put away from the sinking vessel, and 14 others are believed to have been killed by the explosion. The torpedo, only seven of the crew of 38 are known to have been landed.

A boat containing seven of the Healdton's crew has reached Terschelling (North Sea).

The steamer Healdton, of 4,450 tons, sailed from Chester, Pa., on January 28, for Rotterdam, with 2,137,711 gallons of refined petroleum. The Healdton was owned by the Standard Oil Company, and was commanded by Captain Christopher. She carried a crew of 38 men.

Thirteen members of the American steamer Healdton's crew have arrived at Zuidveen, Holland. They say the steamer was sunk without warning in the so-called "safe zone," and express the belief that nineteen men aboard the vessel were drowned.

WASHINGTON REPORTS: American Consul at Amsterdam, cabled the State Department to-night that the American steamer Healdton, sunk by a submarine yesterday off Terschelling, Holland, was torpedoed without warning, and that 20 of the crew were drowned.

The steamer Maryland, of Milwaukee, Philadelphia to London, has been posted by Lloyd's as missing, according to State Department advices today from Consul-General Skinner at London. No details were given.

Vice-Consul Krohn at Rotterdam, advised the State Department to-night of the sinking by gunfire from a German submarine of the Dutch tank steamship Lacapline, with an American captain, Gustav Claude, on March 13, in the North Sea safety zone. The crew was saved after being buffeted 20 hours in a lifeboat.

HAD THEM RIGHT.

Why Spy Bureau Heads
Pleaded Guilty in N.Y.

New York despatch: The reasons were assigned to night by Government officials for the unexpected pleas of guilty entered by Charles N. Wunnenburg and Albert G. Sander, indicted for engaging in a military enterprise against a power with which the United States is at peace, in carrying on which they sent spies to England to obtain information for the benefit of Germany.

One of the causes of their move, it is said, was the knowledge that Federal agents raided their office yesterday and seized papers declared to be highly incriminating. When what appeared to be blank papers were treated with a solution of chemical tablets dissolved in vinegar the authorities found, they asserted, secret writing in German. Translations were made and would have been used as evidence by the prosecution.

The second reason for the step was believed to be the fact that a letter which one of the defendants sent to a friend admitting "they had him right" came into the possession of the Government.

BRITISH ADVANCE RAPIDLY; 40 MORE VILLAGES TAKEN

Gen. Haig's Forces Have Reached Points Ten Miles East of Somme.

Disgusting Tactics By the Huns In Their Abandonment of Territory.

London cable says: Since the Allied pursuit of the retreating Germans, on Saturday, the enemy has given up over 1,700 square miles of French soil and 325 towns and villages, and the vast retirement still continues, stirred on by the British and French cavalry, the British and French, and hammered the Huns, the positions being by the artillery, the positions being by the allies as fast as they are conquered.

London, March 21.—Again the British are moving rapidly against the retreating Germans. Forty more villages have been taken by the British in the last 24 hours and reached points some ten miles to the east of the River Somme. We have occupied another forty villages in this area.

"Between Nuri and Arras the enemy is beginning to develop considerable resistance at a number of places. Nevertheless, his rear guards are being steadily driven from their positions, and our progress continues."

CLAIM SUCCESSES.

The German headquarters report issued to-day says:

Western theatre: Owing to rain and a snowstorm there has been limited fighting activity. Between Arras and Berlincourt and northwest of Ham and north of Solonsours our protecting troops forced some mixed detachments of our adversaries to retreat with losses."

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS CABLE SAYS: Opinions as to where the enemy will stop are merely opinions. What are not mere opinions is the last evidence of the base conduct of the Germans in the country from which they have gone. No Europeans but Germans would have acted at the dictation of such a depraved, unclean and malicious policy. One feels that these men were defiled at the source of their origin, and are ignorant of whatever keeps humanity on a common level with the general sense of what is right behavior.

I can understand national monuments being removed as war material, but I cannot understand the marring of fifth over the portraits of children. At Bapaume yesterday proof of the enemy's curious national traits was seen in the city itself, which had been deliberately converted into a mass of mud. There is now no Bapaume. When in future Germans talk of the world's need of their culture, Bapaume and Peronne should silence them.

There is much in Bapaume to make the mind and stomach sick, but among broken mirrors, crockery, smashed furniture, plaster, old papers, in what had been a stationer's shop a photographic enlargement of a group of three little girls, evidently once a family treasure, but made foul by a broken mirror, was a trivial but ultimate piece of sickening evidence. The destruction of the orchards, killing of trees, throwing of ordnance and sheep dip down wells, defiling books and portraits of little things in homes which were not worth looting turn one in disgust from the name of German. If he could even win the war he could never win his name from being anything but an insulting epithet.

South of Peronne the villagers are still being found by our troops. In one place our men released some hundreds from barns in which they were locked by the Germans. Groups of old men, women and children to whom the British were only a myth welcomed the advanced guard with tears.

"Are you many?" asked one woman doubtfully of a staff officer.

"We are 2,000,000 now," said the officer. The woman's relief and joy were fine to see. What these people wanted was food. They had hardly had meat, butter or fat for two months. They say that the German soldiers are getting less to eat now, and grumble a good deal.

At Noste the inhabitants told us that the Boche began preparations to go only ten days ago, and seemed glad of retreating to what they called the Hindenburg Line, because, apparently he thinks he will be safe there. When the French troops arrived at Tergier where the "Compagnie du Nord" had large workshops and locomotive sheds they found everything destroyed with dynamite.

A Berlin telegram which describes the movements of the German withdrawal, beginning with the evacuation of Grandcourt, says the greatest consideration was paid to the inhabitants. The road from Chauvy to Noyon was one continual stream of refugees from villages beyond Chauvy, sacked and burned by the Germans. The refugees consisted exclusively of women, babies and small children. For weeks past the Germans had expelled them from village to village, in preparation for retreat. When the final moment came, the houses were sacked, then burned before the eyes of the refugees, who were left helpless and without food to await the French advance.

At Noyon, owing to the fact that the Germans had concentrated there 10,000 women and children refugees, they promised to leave the American Relief Commission sufficient supplies to feed them. Nevertheless, the men refused to leave Noyon completely. The American Relief Commission, having all the food, then dynamited the building, and finally turned on the main water, with which they flooded that part of the city in ruins.

FOOD CRISIS IN GREAT BRITAIN

Two Meatless, Potatoes Days Weekly Likely.

Food Hoarding and Traders' Schemes Must End.

London cable says: The food question is pressing daily with increasing stringency on the British public, and according to authoritative reports, a few days will see new and drastic steps on the part of the Food Controller, Lord Devonport, to meet the situation and prevent exploitation of the public by traders.

The Controller announced in the House of Lords to-day that although voluntary rationing had brought about excellent results, much more in this direction was required, otherwise it might be necessary to resort to compulsory rationing, which would be a national calamity. He was very desirous of avoiding this, owing to the tremendous machinery needed. This machinery, however, was ready, he declared, if required, and a great reduction in bread and sugar was still imperative. The Controller also intended, he said, to introduce a strong measure to prevent the hoarding of food.

According to an unofficial report, the Government intends to introduce two meatless and two potatoes days weekly in all restaurants and hotels, and to forbid more than five ounces of uncooked meat to be served for each person.

With regard to hoarding it is said that the police will be empowered to search private houses, and if more than a fortnight's supply of sugar, on a basis of a weekly allowance of three-quarters of a pound per capita, is found, the persons so hoarding will be severely punished. Traders would also be prohibited, under penalties, from attempting to compel purchasers to buy other things before being supplied with sugar, potatoes, and similar commodities, as this system has led to mischievous waste.

METHOD IN DESTRUCTION BY THE HUN

May Have a Political Motive in Ruining Freed Territory.

THREAT TO FRANCE

That All Held Ground Will Be So Treated If Negotiations Fail.

London cable says: Germany a her work of devastation which is turning the abandoned territory on Northern France into a desert may have a political motive in the direction of a threat thus to treat all occupied territory, unless France enters into peace negotiations, was the theory advanced by Major Gen. F. B. Maurice, chief director of military operations at the War Office, in his weekly talk to the Associated Press to-day.

"The extent of the German retreatment was no surprise to us," he said, "and you may feel that I prepared you for it. Just where the new line will be formed it is not possible to say. It is by no means certain that the Germans will again offer battle on the Cambrai-Leon line.

"Theories as to the ultimate withdrawal are purely speculative, as, for instance, advancing on Lille the Germans may extend their defense from Cambrai. On the other hand, while using the same pivot, they may form a line along the lower slopes of the Ardennes."

General Maurice then showed a number of photographs of ruined and burning villages taken before they were actually abandoned by the Germans, showing an almost total destruction. With reference to these villages he said:

"Some were never under our artillery fire. Of course, destruction dictated by military necessity is permissible, but the Germans have turned the abandoned country into a desert. Every crossroad is marked by a brown mine crater. Other measures of this sort were adopted as a military necessity to retard our advance, but the destruction of buildings, homes and splendid churches cannot be defended on this ground."

"When a military motive is lacking we must look for a political, unless the Germans are animated by a pure love of savagery. This political motive may be a threat to France that unless peace negotiations are entered into the remainder of the occupied territory will be turned into the same sort of a desert now marking the German retreat. Of course, the primary object of the destruction is a desire to avoid battle at any cost until the enemy is securely fixed in another line where he can resume the initiative after compelling us to make new preparations on the devastated terrain."

"Unofficial reports of fires and explosions north of Arras have been verified and may mean a retirement in that direction, as similar actions marked the preliminaries of the present retreat."

"Stronger resistance by the enemy on both flanks of the German withdrawal is quite natural. At these points the Germans have the support of their guns and do not show the same disposition to avoid battle."

"The lack of reports of prisoners taken or of the capture of material is not surprising in view of the fact that our advanced troops are too busy with more important operations to send back detailed reports covering anything except the most vital movements."

REFUGEES IN SYRIA HELD

Teutons Refuse Guarantees to U. S. Vessels.

British Advance Their Only Hope Now.

Washington despatch says: Turkey again notified the State Department to-day that neither German nor Austria-Hungary had indicated a willingness to give assurances for the safe passage of the American cruiser Dea Moines and the American naval collier Caesar from Alexandria, Egypt, to Beirut to deliver relief supplies to the destitute Syrians, and to bring out 1,000 or more American refugees.

The plight of the Americans stranded at Beirut is causing increasing concern here, for officials feel they virtually have exhausted every diplomatic resource to reach them. Ambassador Hiltus is expected to renew his efforts for a safe conduct, but in the face of the growing seriousness of the situation between the United States and Germany there is little hope that any guarantees will be given making it safe for the American vessels to proceed through the mined and patrolled waters to their destination.

Turkey some time ago consented to give such a guarantee for herself, but Germany and Austria apparently have been procrastinating while their differences with the United States are solving themselves.

What the Americans at Beirut may be suffering means are not known here, though it is hoped the British advance soon may extend far enough to free some of them.

Are YOU doing your part?

ALL EYES turn now to the Canadian Farmer, for he can render the Empire SPECIAL SERVICE in this sternest year of the war.

But—our farms are badly undermanned—25,000 men are needed on the land.

With insufficient help, the Man on the Land fights an uphill fight to meet the pressing need for Food.

CITY and TOWN can help.

Municipal Councils, Churches and Schools, and other organizations, both of men and women, can render National Service by directing all available labour to the Land.

Farmers themselves can exchange labour. School boys can assist.

Were you raised on a farm? Can you drive a team? Can you handle fork or hoe? If you can't fight, you can produce. Spend the Summer working on the Farm.

Let every man, woman and child in the Dominion who has access to Land, no matter how small the plot, make it produce Food in 1917.

Fine For "Listeners" on Party Lines

Listening to telephone conversations on party lines is going to be an unprofitable amusement in the future. Hon. I. B. Lucas introduced in the Legislature amendments to the Ontario Telephone Act that will put a penalty upon such offences. The Attorney-General stated for the present the penalty would be placed upon those who listened to a conversation not intended for them and repeated it. The provision is also made to cover telephone operators who repeat things heard over the line.

GROWTH REPORTED FOR THE ORANGE ORDER

Many Members Oversea

Nearly All Lodges in District Carrying Members in Uniform.

The fifty-eighth annual session of the Local Orange Grand Lodge for Eastern Ontario opened at Belleville, Wednesday afternoon, March 21st, with almost a record attendance. Grand Master E. H. McLean, of Bowmanville, president of the 25th Battalion, presided over the convocation. The address of welcome from Mayor Ketcheson and the Aldermen of the L.O.L. 274 and 2519, the 'Pioneer Boys and True Blues, County of South Hastings, District No. 1, were very heartily appreciated by the members of the Grand Lodge. Responses to the address were made by the Grand Master, Bro. Burney, of Kingston, and Bro. Sir Knight L. E. Stanley, of Ottawa.

An address of welcome was also given by Master Capt. T. D. Rustin, on behalf of Derry Lodge, True Blue, of that city, which was suitably acknowledged. Rt. Hon. Bro. W. W. Higgins, of Bancroft, grand auditor, was absent, owing to illness, and Hon. Bro. Wm. Joynt, P.C.M., of Carleton, was appointed grand auditor for the session.

Grand Master McLean, in his address referred to the fact that the past year had been one of progress notwithstanding the fact that many thousands of the members had crossed overseas in response to the call of King and Country, and not a few had made the great sacrifice. Hastings County South had the largest increase for the year, namely, 90, and Victoria County was second with 78. Nearly all the lodges in the jurisdiction were carrying those of its members who had gone to the war.

The Grand Master referred to the school situation and the gratifying victory which followed so many years of steady pressure to exclude any language but the English from the schools of the province. The claims of the Orange Association will not be abated by one jot or one tittle and were assured that the Government of the Province of Ontario will present an unyielding front in this matter. The Home Rule question was referred to and it was gratifying to know that if Home Rule was given, Protestant Ulster would be excluded. During the year death had claimed Right Hon. Bros. Albert Bradley and John Delamere, both past grand masters of this jurisdiction.

The committee on correspondence reported acknowledging the addresses of welcome presented, also referred in glowing terms to the able address presented by Grand Master Capt. E. H. McLean, and congratulating him upon the personal sacrifice he had made by offering his services for King and Country.

The following resolution, introduced by Bro. Dr. J. W. Edwards, M.P. for Frontenac, and seconded by Bro. C. R. Webster, County Master for South Frontenac, was unanimously adopted:—"That the Right Worshipful Orange Grand Lodge of Ontario East requests the Right Hon. Sir Robt. Borden, Premier of the Dominion of Canada, to use his influence with the Government of Great Britain and Ireland to prevent any laws being passed during the time of war which would tend to create further dissension or lead to the oppression of any portion of the population of Ireland." A resolution was passed "that this Right Worshipful Grand Lodge of Ontario East approve of the firm stand taken by the Right Hon. David Lloyd George, Premier of Great Britain and Ireland, in refusing to coerce the Protestant counties of Ulster at the dictation of the Nationalist party of Ireland, and that a cablegram expressing this approval be sent to the Right Hon. David Lloyd George."

A letter from Bro. E. Guss Porter, K. C., M.P., stating his regret at being unable to attend was read.

Grand Lodge decided to invest $2,700 in the Third Dominion of Canada War Loan.

Grand Black Chapter

Officers were Elected at the Concluding Meeting.

At the 41st annual convocation of the Provincial Grand Black Chapter of Eastern Ontario held at Belleville on Wednesday, March 21st, a resolution was presented expressing appreciation of the splendid services rendered by the late Minister of Militia, Sir Sam. Hughes, for King and Empire in securing 32,000 men and training and equipping them at the beginning of the war to render service at the front, and his later work in raising and training our great Canadian army of 300,000 men, expressing the wish that he may long be spared to service as a valuable servant of the State.

It was recommended that a resolution be forwarded to Sir Wm. Hearst, commenting and congratulating the Government upon their firm attitude in this important question, or demanding that they continue to still stand firm, expressing the Order's determination to resist by all lawful means attempts to control our Public Schools by any power other than

DEAR MADAM:

Another week has rolled around, another week of this awful war with the usual toll of fatalities, but every day brings Germany that much closer to humiliation and a lasting peace for the Nations of the earth, what a glorious day it will be when hostilities cease and freedom from military oppression will be assured for generations yet to come. I believe we are on the eve of startling developments and by the time another year has rolled around, the sound of guns will cease and diplomatic battles will begin, just how long it will take to arrange peace terms will be difficult to estimate, but if everything is closed up by the end of 1919 it will be good work done, that is nearly three years hence. The submarine campaign by Germany will fizzle out just the same as all their other attempts. Hundreds of vessels are landing and sailing from Britain and France daily, while the number destroyed by submarines are more than offset by the number of vessels newly constructed, every submarine that Germany loses she also loses her crew, and after a time they will see the futility of their enterprise as they will be unable to procure men to man their U. Boats, i. e., men who have the technical training necessary for a submarine crew. Remember that the British Admiralty now have over three thousand craft whose crews are calculated solely to hunt down and destroy the German submarine fleet, and they are doing splendid work along these lines. In newspaper reports you see very little of what is being done by this fleet of still hunters of the deep, but after the war is over and a history of it is written then will the world realize what sacrifices have been made by the fearless men who compose the crews of this fleet of silent watchers, Britain and the world will owe their national liberty to the British navy.

We still have pleasant spring weather, birds are singing in the woods just like summer time, and the farmers are making garden and will start seeding in a few days. The pasture fields are green and plows are working in every direction. I had always been obsessed with the idea that this was a cold, bleak coast, but this winter's experience has proved that I was laboring under a mistaken impression. The men who are working outside have not lost a single day for bad weather since November which is saying a great deal for weather conditions, but farther south both in England and Scotland they have had very severe weather, while in France they have had intense cold, the ground being frozen to a depth of from three to five feet.

We will be through here in about six weeks but do not know as yet just where we will be going. I presume however, that it will not be very far from where we now are stationed. I had an opportunity offered me to go to London but prefer staying here during the summer months. A large city like London does not appeal to me, especially in the warm season. Nothing like the open country and forests with sea breezes for me.

No doubt they will adopt the daylight saving scheme again this summer which means getting up an hour earlier each morning but leaves five hours of good daylight after the days work is finished. Give kindest regards to all the friends and don't fail to write every week as usual, but the mails are so irregular lately it may be a long time before they reach me. I am,

Yours Lovingly,
Sgt. T. C. MacConnell.

Easter Service in St. John's Church

The service in St. John's church, Easter Sunday, "The Queen of Festivals," were well attended. There was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 8 a.m. and evening at 7 o'clock. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion with Easter lilies, carnations, etc., and for the first time the choir numbering 19 was voted. The service was of a most impressive nature commemorating as it did the triumphant note of the Resurrection as sounded in the glorious epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, "Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept." The rector took for his text, St. Luke, 24, 5 and 6, and dwelt upon the blessing flowing from the Resurrection. The choir was at its best and the hymns were most appropriately selected, the Recessional being, "I know my Redeemer lives."

On Monday evening the annual vestry meeting was well attended which was the 13th presided over by the present rector, Rev. B. F. Byers, M. A. Everything was most satisfactory and showed how deep an interest was manifested from all quarters.

Letter to Miss Clara Martin

Bramshott, (North)
Hants, Eng.

From—Sgt. J. G. BETLER.

To—Miss C. MARTIN, Stirling.

Dear Friend:—

I am writing you to state my exceedingly thanks to you (on behalf of the Stirling Red Cross Society) for your kindness in sending me such a useful parcel.

I don't think you women of Stirling will ever get paid for your kindness to me as well as all the rest of the Stirling Lads, who have received such kindness at your hands. You must, I am sure, all be very proficient with the needles by this time, or else I am getting cold feet, for I have received (although with the greatest appreciation) almost numberless pairs of socks.

Well as you will see by this epistle I am still in England, although not by my own choice, as I have been fully equipped for France five times only and always got stopped by something or other each time. This time it being a case of mumps in one of my platoon of 74 men. He took them one day as we were to go the second day later, although I will go the last of this month if not disappointed.

The weather has been real sunny and warm for two days until to-day when it is raining hard. We do not mind the rain as the cause of it is so exhilarating, being caused from such a tremendous shell fire across the channel.

Our papers were all this morning giving a glowing account of the capture by the allies of 60 towns and villages including Peronne and Bapaume (which the Germans said was harder to capture than for Spain to capture Gibraltar) also that Sweden's fleet has joined ours to make old Fritz take notice. Our Cavalry too are in action and our men are fighting in the open and not in trenches. We have as Sir Douglas Haig estimates, lots of men, lots of ammunition, lots of guns and in fact everything to bring this terrible war to a successful end.

There will be a great many sad hearts made light after this great conflict. You can walk around these little towns and villages any time and will see but very few men, and those that are left are either too old or crippled to go to war and every woman is working either in munition works, farms or some other occupation that was done by a man formerly. There is not anyone sleeping around here you bet.

It looks funny to see the women working the farm and on the trains and trams. I saw one this morning wheeling a barrow full of small wood down the lane, by the way, wood is 4d a bushel, you'd think it was wheat or oats. Ha! Ha!

There is not much news here as we don't get out to get any. We have lots of enjoyment each day watching the numerous airships maneuvering around here. They brought down another Zeppelin 2, 3 or 4 days ago. I guess when Fritz comes to his right mind he'll see it is getting quite expensive. Ha! Ha! Hope this note finds you, as well as your sister and mother well, and again thanking you as much of the other ladies of Stirling Red Cross Society. I am,

Yours Sincerely,

Sgt. JACK BETLER.

The Delineator Aids "Buy-At-Home" Move

Leading Woman's Magazine in America Adopts Radical Policy of Benefit to Local Merchants

The "Buy-at-Home" movement in Stirling has been joined by a mighty ally. Our local merchants and associations have been pushing it for years, with more or less success. And during an equal length of time out-of-town concerns have been bidding for local trade through advertising in the magazines, which go into our homes, and through the subsequent distribution of their own catalogues direct to Stirling people.

Up to now, the "Buy-at-Home" movement has been conducted solely along community lines. It has had no aid from national sources. It is therefore particularly cheering news to learn that THE DELINEATOR, sold through G. H. LAKEY, local agent for the magazine and for Butterick Patterns, has thrown the full weight of its tremendous influence on the side of the local merchant—the man who pays taxes here, employs neighbors and friends, and helps build up the town generally. Beginning with the April issue, on sale March 10th, THE DELINEATOR eliminates from its advertising columns the announcements of all mail-order houses.

It is understood that this step has been taken at a loss to the publishers of hundreds of thousands of dollars, a sacrifice that works in the interest of the local merchant, who will directly benefit through THE DELINEATOR's sending customers into his store rather than to distant mail-order houses. We therefore believe that the tendency in this town will be to support THE DELINEATOR heartily. The only way the magazine can recoup any part of its loss in revenue is through more local subscriptions, and more advertising from nationally known factors. Such support, we believe, will be readily forthcoming. The interests of THE DELINEATOR and the taxpayers of this town are identical in this respect. Reciprocity is necessary to insure the prosperity of each.

Stirling W. I.

The Women's Institute of Stirling met on Thursday, April 5th, about 14 being present.

It was decided that $100 be handed over to treasurer of Red Cross.

Programme for next month to be Miss E. Parker and Mrs. R. P. Coulter.

A very interesting programme was then given, a paper on "Economy" by Mrs. Bert Corrigan.

A paper on "Poetry making," by Mrs. N. Parker. A paper on "Attitude of women toward franchise," by Mrs. Dr. Faulkner.

A recitation by Miss Arlene Corrigan "Dorothy Rose."

A duet, violin and piano by Miss Currie and Mrs. W. S. Martin.

Last of all a talk on "Poultry" by Mr. McIntosh.

This speaker was not so much for inspiration. He suggested that each present should "do her bit" by utilizing some space, however small, for the keeping of a few hens and thus aid in the supply of eggs for the home.

A full attendance is requested next month as this is our annual meeting.

Keep hens this year

EGG and poultry prices, the like of which have seldom or never been experienced, certainly make it worth anyone's while to start keeping hens. By doing so you have fresh eggs at the most trifling cost. At the same time you have the splendid satisfaction of knowing that you are doing something towards helping Britain, Canada and the Allies achieve victory this year.

Increased production of food helps not only to lower the high cost of living, but it helps to increase the urgently needed surplus of Canada's food for export. It saves money otherwise spent for eggs and poultry at high prices, and saves the labor of others whose effort is needed for more vital war work.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture will give every possible assistance by affording information about poultry keeping. Write for free bulletin which tells how to keep hens (address below).

"A vegetable garden for every home"

Nothing should be overlooked in this vital year of the war. The Department earnestly invites everyone to help increase production by growing vegetables. Even the smallest plot of ground, when properly cultivated, produces a surprising amount of vegetables. Experience is not essential.

On request the Department of Agriculture will send valuable literature, free of charge, giving complete directions for preparing soil, planting, cultivation, etc. A plan of a vegetable garden, indicating suitable crop to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free to any address.

MEXICAN NATIVE LIFE.

Picture of Richest of the South-Central States.

A striking picture of native life in Guanajuato, the treasure city of mercantile Mexico, is given in a communication to the National Geographic Society by Frank H. Probert. Mr. Probert reveals the Mexican people as they are known only to the American who has lived among them.

"Leaving the walled enclosure of the railroad yards," says the writer, "one looks down on the apparently cramped and crowded city of Guanajuato, capital of the richest of the south-central states of Mexico. Hard by, to the right is the bull-ring, the scene on Sundays and fiestas of farcical combats between two-legged brutes and four-legged beasts."

"In the soft sunshine of summer days the first vista of the city is striking indeed. Churches of magnificent proportions; ancient and modern architectures, strangely blended in the same edifice; stately buildings, imposing markets, stores of all descriptions and dwelling places, rudely bare, variously colored with neutral tints of calomine, their grated windows and open doors exhibiting to all the merely furnished interior, where bird, beast and human eat and live together. The sordid squalor of the many contrasts strikingly with the oppressive opulence of the few."

"The cobblestone streets are crooked and narrow, so narrow in fact that caballeros must take to the sidewalk to permit the passing of any kind of vehicle. The dingy trams are drawn by relays of mules, three abreast, beaten into submission by the stinging lash or coaxed into action by the curses of youthful drivers, whose vernacular is wonderfully expressive and effective; indeed, I doubt, if anything, but a musician really appreciate the depth of feeling and irresistible persuasiveness of the expressions."

"What strange sights one can see in these main arteries of that city! I have seen my camera on the balcony of my room at the hotel and will never pass by it. At first a herd of patient plodding burros loaded down with slabs of pale green sandstone, quarried nearby and used for building purposes; a legion of crumpled shufflers along on a board, propelling himself with his hands; a cargador trots along tirelessly with his awkward burden, in this case a sewing machine; more burros overloaded with charcoal; another pack struggles under the weight of sacks of ore from the mines; still another bearing grain to the market, and the street car demanding loudly a clear track; a funeral procession where laughing children carry a baby's casket, swaying from side to side to the accompaniment of anything but appropriate music, and behind the mourners in solemn solemnity."

"Strangely superstitious are these people. Grossly ignorant, constant in their faith, pathetic in their simplicity, kindly and respectful, their life is epitomized in the verse:

"Let the world slide, let the world go;
A fig for care and a fig for woe!
If I can't pay, why I can owe!
And death makes equal the high and low."

"This Sunday morning, I am awakened at early dawn by the tooting of tin horns, accompanied by the enormous stretches of brass violas and fiddles as sounds are rawn from their strings; by the shuffling of sandaled feet over the sands of the street, and the babel of voices of passing peons. Church bells clang, sirens scream, whistles wildly mingle in the melody of merriment; for is not this the day when Judas Iscariot is to be hung in effigy?

"Night falls on an exhausted though happy people. What matters it if the prison is overcrowded that night, or that the supply of pulque or mescal is depleted almost to the degree of exhaustion?

"To the casual visitor from the States the habits and customs of these lowly people are strange, but fascinating. They do not need our condescension or sympathy; they are content in their mode of living, and who shall say that they are the less happy or human in their habit than many of us?

"The Mexican peon knows that he is born to serve, as did the old southern darky, and caste or class distinction is emphasized on all occasions. The peon rides silently behind the lordly caballero; the peon woman steps into the street, and bows her head as the padre passes; in the plaza on Sunday evenings, when the melody of martial music fills the air, the upper classes parade in one direction, while the peons gyrate as an outer ring in the opposite direction. As a class they are industrious and skillful if the time element is eliminated."

"The peon miner is a competent workman when unhampered by modern machines and has a 'nose' for ore that is truly remarkable. As tillers of the soil their methods are primitive but productive; they still use oxen and the wooden plowshare, and the fields are fenced with imperishable dry-dock walls. In the making of pottery and bakery they excel; in tanning hides, saddlery and the working of metals they are inimitable. The women, too, can grind corn on a metate, cook tortillas and frijoles, raise families, laundry clothes on a rock near the creek, and make the most exquisite lace and the finest of drawn work with equal skill."

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

The Prince of Wales has been initiated into the craft of Masonry. A curious custom prevails on the Gold Coast. Every Tuesday is devoted to the seagod. No fishing takes place, but the fishermen utilize the time in mending their nets.

The new "Jacobean saloon" of the Richmond Bar, Buenos Ayres, Argentina, announces on its staff "two cocktail specialists, brought expressly from North America," and 120 cocktails.

Strigau, a town in Prussian Silesia, has pounced upon cats as a suitable object for increasing the community's wartime revenue. Every owner of a cat must pay an annual tax equivalent to about $2.50. The tax is to continue for a period of two years.

If we count the wealth of North America and South America as it seems today, we find that the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus has been worth to the world $2,000,000 a day from the time he called from Palos in August, 1492, down to the present time, says the Popular Science Monthly. Likewise, the man who discovered the way of drawing tungsens who gave $500,000,000 worth of light yearly.

An English astronomer of prominence has advanced the theory that there are earthquakes, entirely independent of earthquakes, that are caused by the explosion of meteors in the atmosphere.

"Wear yellow and bluff the meek quito," is the slogan of scientists who are fighting this little pest and who have discovered the carnivorous insect's antipathy to the primary color. Their discoveries are supported by the testimony of United States Marines, just returned here from the Philippines, who attribute their immunity from mosquito-bite and malarial infection to the fact that their khaki uniform is of a yellow hue.

In consequence of the almost complete famine in rubber for tires and other military requirements the German government has forbidden pleasure cycling, and has limited the use of bicycles to urgently necessary commercial work, and then only under strict police supervision. Meantime, all tires and inner tubes on wheels not used for industrial or business purposes are declared confiscated and must be handed over to special depots, where they are purchased by the War Office at assessed values. Persons desiring cycles for purposes of business must furnish convincing evidence of their needs and obtain special certificates. They will be punished if machines are used for "joy riding," or any purpose not specifically permitted.

No human being has ever been known positively to be killed by the fall of a meteorite. Probably the narrowest escape was that of three children in Braunau, at the time of the fall of an iron meteorite in 1847. This object, weighing 40 pounds, fell in a room where the children were sleeping, and covered them with debris, but they were not injured. In each of two celebrated meteoric showers—those of Pultusk and "Moca"—more than 100,000 stones fell. All observed showers were of stones, but the finding of numerous individuals of iron in single localities, such as Toluca and Canon Diablo, indicates that showers of iron meteorites sometimes occur. The largest known meteorite is one brought from Cape York, Greenland, by Penny, weighing 36½ tons. It is in the American Museum of Natural History, New York. Twenty-nine chemical elements have been found in meteorites in quantities sufficient for accurate study.—Scientific American.

WORTH KNOWING.

To rid the house of insects pests dissolve common alum, one pound in two quarts of boiling water. When thoroughly dissolved, and while still hot, apply with a brush to pantry shelves, cupboard shelves, closets, or other infested places. In bedroom or kitchen, where bugs and roaches hide, apply to all cracks and loose joints, splintered places and holes with an oil can. It is effective, but must be used with care, as it will ruin paint, varnish or oil surfaces.

One of the best beautifiers for the skin is oatmeal cream. Put a handful of oatmeal in a half-pint of hot water; let stand a few hours; then apply to the face with the hand, or a soft cloth, and allow it to dry. This will make the roughest skin smooth, and will help to soften it. Oatmeal cream is just as effective for rough, chapped hands as the cream you buy at the drugstore and costs you only a few cents.

One ounce of gum shellac, one ounce of beeswax and six ounces of rosin make an excellent scalding wax. Melt over hot water and when well mixed it is ready for use. As this mixture must be applied to the jar or can lids boiling hot, if bubbles arise on pressing the cover, drop a little more of the wax where the bubbles are, and it will be effectively sealed.

BISQUE OF OYSTERS.

A Very Good Recipe Which Leaves Nothing Unsaid.

To make bisque of oysters take one pint of oysters, one tablespoonful of butter, yolk of one egg, one pint of milk, one tablespoonful of flour, salt and pepper to taste.

Drain the oysters free from their liquor, adding sufficient cold water to make a cup of liquid. Chop half the oysters fine. Brisk the oysters liquor to a heavy cream, add the chopped oysters and simmer ten minutes.

Scald the milk; rub the butter and flour together until smooth, add to the milk and stir until it thickens. Add the whole oysters to the oyster liquor, and as soon as their edges curl remove all from the fire. Add the beaten yolk of the egg to the milk, take it once from the fire and mix with the oysters and their liquor. Season and serve at once.

It may be headed north, or rolling merrily toward the Pacific while he is going toward the Atlantic.

A runaway car apparently is as depraved as any criminal. It hides on a lonely siding or gets lost in a short swamp line. One such runaway Southern Texas simply because it got lost, and no one seemed to know just what to do with it. The nearest freight agent had no record of it and no tracer had requested its return. Going on the principle that what is "everybody's business is nobody's business," this local agent made no effort to hunt up the owners. If the order had been received by him to return it he would have obeyed, but lacking such orders he left it in the siding. In the course of time, it was occupied by a family of squatters, who lived quite comfortably in it for six months, and were routed out only when quite by accident the car tracer discovered it.—Popular Mechanics.

Tracing Lost Cars.

At times when the scarcity of freight cars causes the railroads to place an embargo upon certain classes of goods, the problem of keeping track of its cars to see that they do not run away and become wanderers upon the face of the earth is a stupendous one for each company.

When a freight car is built, it is given a number before it leaves the shop, and therefore it is always known by that number until it is worn out and scrapped. When a new car receives its number, and starts out upon its business career, it is entered in the record book, and a careful account of its wanderings and earning power are kept there. This record book is a history of the car, and by consulting it one can learn how many trips it has made, what cities it has visited, how many times it has been to the repair shop, and also where it is supposed to be at any given time.

But in spite of all this care in keeping a record of each car now and then, for some unexplained reason, one disappears from sight—literally running away. Some of the big companies employ car tracers, but as a rule a printed tracer is first sent after the car to bring it back home. This printed tracer is a blue envelope is sent to the person in whose jurisdiction the car was last supposed to be, and if it had passed out of his district the tracer is sent on to the next one to whom the car was consigned. This little printed tracer failing to bring the car home in a reasonable length of time, a man known as a tracer is sent after it. The tracer is really a railroad car detective.

And sometimes it is more difficult to trace a runaway freight car than a criminal. There are tens of thousands of miles of railways, and hundreds of thousands of freight cars, and to find the one carrying a certain number is often like hunting for a needle in a haystack. The tracer may arrive in a

A TONIC MEDICINE IS A NECESSITY AT THIS SEASON.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all year round tonic, blood-builder and nerve-restorer. But they are especially valuable in the spring when the system is loaded with impurities as a result of the indulgence in the spring months. There is no other season when the blood is so much in need of purifying and enriching, and every dose of these pills helps to make new, rich, red blood.

In the spring one feels weak and tired—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give strength in the spring months. There is often poor—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills develop the appetite, tone the stomach and aid weak digestion. It is in the spring that poisons in the blood find an outlet in disfiguring pimples, eruptions and boils—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills speedily clear the skin because they go to the root of the trouble in the blood. In the spring anaemia, rheumatism, indigestion, neuritis, arthralgia and many other troubles are most persistent because of poor, weak blood, and it is in this time when all nature takes on new life that the blood must seriously needs attention. Some people do themselves with purgatives at this season, but these only further weaken themselves. A purgative merely gallops through the system, emptying the bowels, but it does not cure anything. On the other hand Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood which reaches every nerve and organ in the body, bringing new strength, new health and vigor to weak, easily tired men, women and children. Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills this spring—they will not disappoint you.

GET READY FOR GARDEN

How to Plan Your Work and Work to a Plan.

EVERYBODY GROW VEGETABLES

First of Series of Timely Hints—Get Your Ground Ready Now, or Don't Be in Too Much of a Hurry to Put in the Seed.

(By S. C. JOHNSON, Vegetable Specialist, Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

At no time in many years has the necessity and importance of the home vegetable garden been so clearly shown as in the existing emergency. In France, our wonderful ally, has since the French Revolution been a nation of small farmers, her people are means cultivating some garden land to produce a portion of their own household foodstuffs and to increase the wealth of the nation. Great Britain, threatened with a shortage of foodstuffs, determined to cultivate all available land possible to offset this shortage and was in Canada sending every energy toward facilitating these great nations should do all in their individual power to do something in the hope of helping ourselves and assisting the commonwealth vegetable growers who are seriously handicapped by the shortage of labor in the production of vegetable foodstuffs. Every city, town, and village dweller has an opportunity to help this great work in that there are hundreds of available plots now practically unproductive which could be made grow vegetables and thus add to the wealth of the country.

Vegetables an Important Food.

Vegetables should form an important portion of the daily food of the average human being, for they possess qualities which we are told are essential in the proper digestion of the heavy foods, such as meats. To help you do your part in your backyard this column will discuss some of the practical problems in connection with vegetable growing during the next few weeks.

All backyards cannot be prepared in one year to grow vegetables of an excellent quality. Some portion of the yard, however, may be devoted to this purpose, or, if it is convenient, there are a few vacant lots which are not too far from one's place of abode which possibly could be devoted to the growing of vegetables.

Some Essentials.

First of all it is essential that the vegetable garden, no matter how small, be planted according to some plan or rule. No one often thinks of building a house or to set out a perennial flower border without using some drawing or chart to go by. Why should the vegetable garden be treated differently? Haphazard planting will prove a failure, and in order to overcome this it should be remembered in laying out the garden that (1) Tall plants will be most effective if placed behind low ones, not intermingled with them.

(2) All plants closely allied should be grown together, not in the same row, but in rows adjoining one another.

(3) The fences may be decorated with vine crops which may be supported on the fences by means of strings or lattice work.

(4) All quickly maturing vegetables should be planted in a portion of the garden by themselves so that they may be harvested and the ground used for other crops later on.

The work of planning the garden to determine what vegetables and how much of each is to be grown will be influenced by one's individual tastes. One should grow an abundance of such crops as one consumes the most.

Secure Seed Now—But Plant Only When Soil is Ready.

The backyard gardener should decide very early which crops are to be grown and should purchase his seed as soon as possible. It must be remembered, however, that much of this seed may be wasted if it is planted too early in the season. The soil must be warm to receive the seeds, and amateur gardeners must have patience until it is certain that good growing weather is really here. It is possible in ordinary seasons to plant some vegetables in April, and yet many backyard vegetable enthusiasts will be well advised to wait until the middle of May before doing very much in the garden.

A Strange Revelation

By ELINOR MARSH

When John Dowling retired from the police, at a dinner given him he told the following story:

"Most of you will remember the Charnley murder case. After a month had passed and we had given out every day or so that we were on the track of the murderer and would get him sure the public began to lose confidence and the papers were full of scathing remarks about the police. A decision for city officers was coming on, and the chief told me one day to drop everything else and work on the Charnley case, intimating that the administration's control depended on my discovering the murderer.

"I did a hard lot of thinking on the problem. Indeed, I began to fear that if I lost on I would run into a mania. I walked the floor nights trying to put this and that together to construct a theory of the murder. So my wife put me in a room by myself where I could prowling without waking her or the children.

"One night after the usual brain racket I fell into a slumber. I don't know how long I slept, but I think it was about an hour. Then I woke up and started at seeing a man standing by my bed.

"Come with me," he said, and I put you on to an explanation of the Charnley murder.

"I jumped out of bed, hustled on my clothes, strapped on my revolver—for despite my anxiety to get the information he promised I did not forget that he had come into my house without being admitted, and I was somewhat suspicious of him and followed him downstairs. A horse and buggy were standing at the door. We climbed into the vehicle, the fellow whipped up the horse, and off we went.

"I was so impatient and curious to know what was coming that I tried to pump a bit out of him, but his mouth was shut like an oyster, and never a word did he speak from the time we started till we pulled up in front of the house in which Charnley's body had been found the morning after the murder. I knew it was that house, though I didn't know any one of the family of the murdered man. It had been shut up since the tragedy, but now there were lights in every part.

"My companion alighted, led me to the house and, opening the front door for me, bade me enter. What became of him after that I don't know. I didn't see him again, unless one of the persons about whom I am going to tell you was he.

"Hearing voices mingled with sobs upstairs, I ran up and stood in an opening on the second floor, looking into a bedroom through an open door. On a couch lay the figure of a man, but a number of persons were crowding about him so that I could not see his face. A young woman was on her knees beside the couch, hysterically clinging to the body, while another woman was trying to draw her away. A man was standing apart, wringing his hands. I stepped into the room, and the moment he saw me he collapsed. The woman trying to draw the girl away from the body turned and, seeing me, uttered a shriek. Then she dropped on her knees before me, and between her sobs said:

"Don't take him! He made a terrible mistake. Oh, why didn't I confide in him? Let me explain, and when you know how we suffer at what has occurred I am sure you will not add to our misfortune. This is my intimate friend—pointing to the girl beside the couch. She was married clandestinely to the man who lies there. The marriage could not be published because her father would disinherit her. I permitted them to meet here. My husband was away and did not know. There was here this evening, and she was expected. My husband came home suddenly and found him here with me, waiting for her. Mad with jealousy, without giving us time to explain, he seized a heavy glass ornament and brought it down on the victim's head. Please go away from here and say nothing. We are the only ones who know of the tragedy.

"I was thinking what I could say to the woman to make it easy for her—for I felt obliged to report the matter—when the lights went out and left me in darkness.

"I was awakened in the morning by my wife in my own room from a heavy sleep or stupor. I don't know which. She could only get me up by telling me I would be late in reporting. I managed to get into my clothes, swallowed a cup of coffee and went to headquarters.

"I thought the matter over that day and the next told the chief that I had failed to find a clue to the Charnley murder and advised him to keep feeding the public with stories of clues left after election and then let the matter drop. Now that I have unburdened myself I wouldn't mind hearing what you think about it."

"Who do you think was the man who took you to the house?" asked one.

"I don't like to say, but my suspicion is he was the murdered man."

"Did anything ever come out about the murder?" asked another.

"Not that I ever heard."

The consensus of opinion was that Dowling had thought so much about the Charnley case that he had dreamed it all.

A few years later a man on his deathbed confessed that he had killed Charnley by mistake through jealousy which was uncalled for.

RIVER VALLEY

We are not dead—but sleeping!

Mrs. D. Thrasher and children of Belleville are visiting with her sister, Mrs. Edgar Morrow for a few days.

Mr. Gilbert Richardson of the Union Bank, Kingston, Ont., spent Good Friday under the parental roof and Easter Sunday with friends in Norwood.

If the old saying be true as to which way the wind blows on Easter Sunday, I imagine we will experience some raw, cold weather.

Mr. and Mrs. Percy Utman took dinner with the former's parents in Stirling on Sunday and were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bolton on Monday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Delbert Reddick of Frankford, spent a few days among friends and with her parents here.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Donohue and little family, also Mr. and Mrs. Willie Mitz, were invited guests to tea with Mr. Bolton and family Sunday evening.

Mrs. Edgar Morrow held a Red Cross quilting in her home on Wednesday, for the members of the Institute and Red Cross workers.

Quite a few from here enjoyed the Easter morning service in Stirling Methodist church by the Rev. Mr. Manning from Ottawa.

Mrs. Geo. Bolton took dinner with Mr. and Mrs. John Donahue on Monday and made a few calls among her nearest neighbors before leaving for the west.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Mitz were at her mother's home in Frankford for dinner on Easter Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Morrow entertained friends and relatives on Sunday.

Please to note we have Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Derrison as residents in our neighborhood. We wish them all prosperity.

A recent letter received from Pte. G. R. Boulton in Braunschweig, dated March 20th, reports he is well, but the weather is none too favorable. It is very much like it is here at present, snow and rain and just a bit of sunshine occasionally to make things cheerful.

The April meeting of our Institute, held at the home of Mrs. Walter Barker in Stirling, was quite a successful gathering, considering the weather conditions, there being quite 20 members present besides a number of visitors which are always welcome. Another large packing of overseas sewing and knitting was made ready for shipment at Belleville and the tickets sold on a crocheted yoke made by Miss Sadie Cross were drawn, the lucky one going to Mrs. Geo. Barrager, Oak Hills.

Our annual meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Wm. E. Hanna, where the election of new officers will be taken to act for the ensuing year. We hope to have an unusually large attendance that day if the weather and all conditions permit. So boost the Women's Institute and reserve the 3rd of May.

Many of the telephone wires and poles were damaged and broken by the heavy snow storm, which fell last Thursday night.

WEST HUNTINGDON

The young people of this place who have been engaged this winter giving their drama called the "Last Leaf," went to Holloway on Friday evening and we congratulate them on their success. The church was packed so the actors themselves could not gain admittance.

Mrs. A. Turner and Miss Bessie Dickenson spent the week end at Campbellford.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Creeper of Belleville, spent a day at Miss McEugart's recently.

The recent snow storm did considerable damage around here, especially to telephone wires and poles.

Mr. and Mrs. John Brooker of Belleville, spent Sunday at Mr. Geo. Brook's.

Mr. Hamilton Donnan is spending the Easter holidays at his uncle's, Mr. Thos. Donnan's, Stirling.

Mr. Joe. Dickens spent Monday at W. H. Wilson's.

Master Jack and Miss Jean Pittman are visiting their grand father at Campbellford.

Miss Marjorie Bray is spending Easter holidays at Miss Sarah Wilson's.

MINTO

Miss Bessie Bell, of Wooler spent the Easter holidays under the parental roof.

The Enterprise cheese factory began the season's work on Monday last.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. MacMaster spent Easter Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Stout.

A meeting of the Farmer's Club was held in the Club rooms on Monday evening.

Nicholas Stout, of Trinity College, Toronto came home last Friday and will spend the summer with his father on the farm. Before leaving Toronto Nicholas applied for overseas service and was rejected owing to weakness in the day from operation.

House cleaning is the order of the day in our neighborhood.

Mrs. Bell shipped boxes this week, to her sons, Fred and Roy, who are in the trenches.

The Cost of Growing Potatoes

(Experimental Farm Note)

In potato growing provinces like New Brunswick there is always more or less discussion as to what it should cost to grow a good crop of potatoes and statements vary from as low as $40 per acre to as high as $125. Naturally there will be much variation in cost according to local conditions and especially to the ability of the land to produce without expensive fertilizing. It should be borne in mind that it usually costs potato specialists more to grow crops than it will the farmer who follows mixed farming and makes his potato crop merely one of his many activities.

With a view to getting actual figures under average conditions in New Brunswick, a careful record has been made at the Dominion Experimental Station, Fredericton, for the past two seasons with an acre of land set apart for this particular purpose.

Neither rent of land nor depreciation of machinery was included in the calculation, for these two are items that are largely in the hands of the individual grower. As a general rule, however, it would be fair to charge as rent, 10% of the value of the land, and special potato machinery will depreciate from 25% to 50% per year, if used steadily for ten days each season. In 1915, the depreciation of the potato digger alone, used at the Experimental Station, was $6.00 per acre.

In 1915, the acre was planted with Green Mountain, Irish Cobbler and Empire State. Seed, cultural operations and harvesting cost in all $67.93. Eighty barrels of 165 pounds each of marketable potatoes were obtained and sold at $1.75 per barrel making a profit over cost of production of 90c. per barrel. Seven barrels of culls were sold for $3.50, so that the total profit for the acre amounted to $75.50.

This land was rather wet naturally and during the very rainy weather of June and July was several times flooded, causing missed hills and inferior plants generally. This land was originally cleared many years ago and after cutting hay for 30 years it was allowed to grow up to spruce, birch and alder. It was again cleared in 1913 and grew buckwheat in 1914.

In 1916, an acre was planted with Green Mountain seed. The total cost amounted to $82.33, the increase over 1915 being due to high priced seed, higher priced fertilizer ingredients and very dear copper sulphate.

One hundred and twenty barrels of marketable potatoes were harvested and could have been sold at $2.25 per barrel, making a profit per barrel over cost of production of $1.56, plus six barrels of culls at 50c. $3.00 making a total profit of $190.20.

Market price when potatoes were dug was $2.25 per barrel. Later could have been sold at $3.25, but are held for seed.

This land grew hay for many years and was broken up and grew potatoes with 750 pounds fertilizer in 1913, corn with 18 tons barnyard manure in 1914, oats without manure in 1915. This land is on a slope, fairly well drained and except for washing out slightly between the rows felt no bad effects from the June deluge.

Reception

A grand reception was tendered Mr. J. E. Tanner and his bride at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Tanner, of Stirling, Ont., on the evening of April 12th, 1917, when about 50 guests sat down to a wedding dinner that would do honor to a Prince. The Rev. B. F. Byers, Rector of St. John's church, Stirling, occupied a chair at the head of the table and after ample justice had been done to the good things provided, he proposed the health of the bride and groom, coupled with the name of J. T. Belshaw and others who responded to the toast. The chairman gave a very pleasant address referring in pleasant words upon the occasion for which we were gathered together. Mr. Belshaw referred to the history of the groom and of the Tanner family who were amongst the pioneers of Rawdon Township.

The groom being one of the fourth generation of the family. Mr. Tanner received the finishing touches of his education at the High School, Stirling, and taught school for a short time. He also assisted in the Union Bank of Canada, at Spring Brook, before going west. He is at present and has been for several years, manager of the Northern Crown Bank at Lancer, Sask.

The bride whose maiden name was Miss Willie, of Brantford, Ont., was the recipient of several presents. The happy couple will return to their new home in the west in a short time.

Public Mass Meeting

It was decided at the Board of Trade Meeting held last Monday evening to call a mass meeting of the citizens of Stirling and surrounding country on Monday evening next, April 23rd at 8 o'clock in the Opera House, to discuss ways and means to encourage the production of food, which is becoming a very serious question. 40,000,000 people who were producers before the war are now non-producers and are depending upon YOU to help produce food for their sustenance in order to win for you, Justice, Liberty, Honor and safety from the horrors that have been committed by Germany in France, Belgium and Serbia. Should Germany win this war "which she cannot" only through lack of unity in our efforts to produce food and more food. Have you thought what it would mean?

Entered into Rest

Sarah Bertha Spear, beloved wife of Christopher Jarvis, formerly of Madoc, passed away on Friday, April 13th, 1917, at the family residence, Lot 30, Concession 9, Sidney Township.

The late Mrs. Jarvis was ill only a few days suffering intense agony of acute appendicitis. She was operated on and apparently improving until Tuesday, April 10th, she gradually became weaker and never regained consciousness.

She was one of the many brave mothers, who gave her two sons to serve their King and Country and her death is particularly sad as they are both on their way overseas with the 25th Battalion.

Besides her husband and sons, Privates Carl and Gordon, she leaves two little girls, Sadie and Rachael a baby of 8 months old.

Her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. John Spear and one brother, Horace reside in Belleville and John in Chicago; two sisters, Mrs. Rebecca Weston, Victoria, B. C. and Mrs. Rachael Ketcheson, of 5th Concession of Sidney.

Mrs. Jarvis was born in Prince Edward County and lived the greater part of her life in Sidney Township. She was a member of Eggleston Methodist Church.

The funeral service was conducted at the house by Rev. R. Collins, of Stirling, on Sunday, April 15th, at 1 o'clock. Interment in Frankford cemetery.

Deepest sympathy is extended Mr. Jarvis and family in their great bereavement.

HYMENEAL

TANNER-WILLIS

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Willis, 53 St. George St., when their daughter, Ureula, was united in the bonds of holy matrimony to James Edward Tanner, son of Mr. John Tanner, of Stirling, Ont., by the Rev. W. Smythe.

The bride, who looked charming in a gown of Brussels net over Duchess satin, entered the drawing room to the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March played by Miss Myrtle Armstrong. Miss Dora Arnold played during the signing of the register. After the ceremony, the guests adjourned to the dining-rooms, where a dainty luncheon was served.

The tables were beautifully decorated with tulips and amilies. The happy couple left on the six o'clock train for Toronto, Belleville, Stirling and points East. The bride travelled in a navy suit with grey hat and shoes.

Mr. and Mrs. Tanner will reside in Lancer, Sask. Among the out of town guests were Miss Black, of Copetown, Miss Ashton, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., Miss Hamilton, of Toronto and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Willis, of Hamilton.—Brantford Courier, April 11th, 1917.

Professor Zavitz Opposed to Imported Article

That Canada's field crops were worth double the forest, mine and fishing resources put together was the statement made by Prof. C. A. Zavitz, speaking to the Royal Canadian Institute. Prof. Zavitz considered the present food situation serious. He gave two reasons for this, the great reduction in the number of producers and the shortage in the crops of last year.

Speaking about increased production he emphasized the importance of the use of the best seeds and he favored the use of seed from Ontario that had given the best results and was fitted to the climate and soil of the Province. Imported seeds were responsible for a majority of the crop failures.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"Well, come now, dear, I am sure they are all at sixes and sevens," he says, and with a "Come, then," he says, and with a last embrace he draws her arms within his and crossing the hall, enters the hall.

As he does so, and as if in accordance with a preconcerted signal, the door breaks out into the opening waltz. Couples are immediately formed, and the waltzing, "Remember, darling, the first dance is mine," velvet-covered seats upon which Lady Rookwell and some other dandies, and the Duchess and Laura Derwent are seated, awaiting the starting of the ball.

"Yes, yes," says Signa, hurriedly. "But they are all waiting, Hector."

"But they wait," he says again, with a smile; and then, as they come close to the raised seats, he says:

"How do you do, Miss Derwent?"

Laura Derwent starts—a hundred eyes are fixed on her—and rises with a broad stare in her eyes, speechless, huddled—looking from Hector Warren to Signa upon his arm.

"How do you do, Miss Derwent?" he repeats.

Then at last, and to the relief and amazement of those near her, Laura Derwent exclaims:

"Lord Delamere!"

CHAPTER XXIII.

"Lord Delamere!" The title runs through the room like a signal. Those who have been to dance, stop, as if by mutual consent, and stare in the direction of the group round the raised seats. There is a dead, an almost painful silence. The duchess, a pleasant but not too intellectual old lady, puts up her eyes and looks at Hector Warren. The Right Honorable Dextereux Evelyn Hector Delamere Earl of Delamere and Marchant, Knight of the Garter and member of half a dozen other mighty orders—with eyes of amazement; Aunt Podswell clasps her hands and turns pale; the rest of the drops and his hands fall to his side like those of a mechanical figure. Modification, chagrin, absolute fear are expressed in his countenance and attitude. Even Laura Derwent, quick-witted as she is, is thoroughly overwhelmed and thrown off her mental balance. Lady Rookwell alone seems unmoved; with a sarcastic grin she looks from Lord Delamere to the others with the keenest enjoyment. And Signa? Half-dazed, half incredulous, she turns her violet eyes from one to the other, and then, with a pale face and slow, heavy breath, waits for the next development of the mystery.

Lord Delamere, quite motionless and silent, looks as if nothing had occurred, and waits for Laura Derwent's response to his greeting as if she had but paused to pick up her handkerchief. She is the first to recover from the stupor which seems to have fallen upon them all—all save Lady Rookwell.

With a laugh and a flush, the beauty holds out her hand.

"How do you do, Lord Delamere?" she says. "You have been good enough to come, then? And this little surprise we ought to be grateful for! It is just the finishing touch to a marvelous and extraordinary piece of business!"

He bows and goes up to the duchess. "I fear you do not remember me, your grace," he says. "I was a little boy in a velvet tunic when I saw you last. Permit me to introduce Miss Grenville."

The duchess gives him her hand and her fingers to Signa, still standing.

"Yes—no—but I don't understand," she gasps, open-eyed. "Of course, you are Lord Delamere."

"Yes, alas!" he says, with a smile, and then he turns to Aunt Podswell, who rises hastily, and with fearful meekness and awe, and trembling, stands before him.

"I shall have to ask your forgiveness at a more fitting opportunity for my little misdeed, Mrs. Podswell," he says in a kindly way.

"Yes—my lord," murmurs the unfortunate lady, utterly miserable as she thinks of the many times she has snubbed Hector Warren, little dreaming that the threadbare, poor and unknown stranger whom she had dubbed opera-singer and adventurer was the great earl—her husband's patron.

As for the rest, he cannot find words to express his dismay, and stands open-mouthed and crimson, and Delamere considerably leaves him to recover himself. But Lady Rookwell cannot be passed by.

"Well," he says, with a most pleasant light in his eyes, as he stands looking down at her, with Signa on his arm, "I suppose it is useless to expect your forgiveness, Lady Rookwell. I have one consolation, that my little disguise never deceived you for a moment," and he laughs.

"Yes, but it did—for a moment, but not for long," she says, with a malicious chuckle. "I smelt a rat the first night I met you at the Rectory. You see, I remember my room, and when I got home that night, my lord, I studied it, and—oh, he! he!—I detected the wolf in lambs' clothing. I hope you have enjoyed yourself; I hope you are deriving an immense amusement from the dismay and mystification of all these good people," and she waves her fan to the guests murmuring amongst themselves.

His face grows grave.

"You misunderstand and wrong me," he says in a low voice. "I did not desire to mystify anyone. I had, at starting, no reason but to avoid fuss, but later—no matter, I will explain everything, even to your satisfaction."

"You will be cleverer than I think you if you can," she retorts, significantly; "but if you think this little dramatic surprise has lasted long enough, it would be better to set these two hundred people a-dancing, my lord," with a grin at the title.

He nods and smiles.

"You are quite right," he says. "Come, Signa."

She stands motionless for a moment, and then makes a faint movement to withdraw his arm, but he holds it too tightly, and putting his arm round her waist, he takes her hand and they begin to dance.

One-half the room is still in doubt as to what has actually happened. Some know that the gentleman whom they have not taken the slightest notice of, and have treated with the utmost neglect since he came here amongst them is the great Earl of Delamere, but the rest are simply curious as to the evident excitement his advent has created; and soon the inviting strains of one of the best London bands make them oblivious, at least for a few minutes to the momentary sensation. When Lord Delamere and Signa move away, the tongues of the group he has left loosen themselves. With a groan the restorers wipe the perspiration from his face and creep near to his wretched Amelia.

"Great heavens!" he whispers, huskily. "Who—who would have thought it possible! There is not any mistake, I suppose—no, it is evidently true. But to think of it—to think of—the way we treated him—sometimes! My flesh creeps, Amelia! Of course, that living is gone! If I could but have guessed it! Oh, dear—oh, dear! It—it is really too bad! And Signa—"

"Knew it all the time, no doubt!" whispers Aunt Amelia, shakily. "Jos.eph—I—I always said there was something uncommon—and distinguished about him!"

"Did you? I don't remember it!" retorts the restorers, his desperation giving him courage. "If I had followed your advice I should have treated him like a tramp! There! don't make an exhibition of yourself before all these people!" for Aunt Amelia begins to sniff and whimper hysterically.

"This is very remarkable!" says the duchess, still following with her eye-glass the tall figure, easily distinguished by its band of blue ribbon. "This—really, I do not like to suggest it—but this isn't a little piece of masquerading thrown in for our amusement. Miss Derwent?" and she smiles ponderously at that young lady.

"Would to heaven it were!" exclaims Laura Derwent, fanning herself furiously, and staring into vacancy. "Not it! Lord Delamere—I should know him from a thousand miles! He is a moment!" And to think—I think that I have been ordering him about all these weeks! That, not content with leading me about in a superior kind of clerk of the works or steward. Oh! if I could sink into the earth!"

"I see," grins Lady Rookwell, with intense enjoyment. "You met your match, my dear Laura, that day at Cassinella!"

"I won't, I'll never forgive you!" she exclaims with tears in her eyes. "It's too cruel. But it serves me right."

"That's the truest word you ever spoke, my dear; but take your punishment like a man, as you ought to have been, and enjoy yourself. After all, you have succeeded; you have got your great fish here, and you will get yourself talked about! Society papers! Why, it will be in all the columns. My dear, you will make another sensation out of this little affair."

"It is too cruel of him," repeats poor Laura.

"I don't have that!" exclaims Lady Rookwell. "I don't believe he meant it that way at all, I liked him from the first; I quite fell in love with him that evening at your place, my dear. He was so very amusing and pleasant. I never laughed so much in my life!"

"He is amusing enough now," retorts Lady Rookwell, sarcastically. "But you don't mean of you laugh!"

"And that dear girl, Miss Grenville, I am delighted at her good fortune," adds Lady Rookwell.

"Ah!" says Laura Derwent, with a start. "I was forgetting her! Yes, of course. Why, she will be the Countess of Delamere!"

"Of course," retorts Lady Rookwell, coolly. "He, he! When some of the mothers with marriageable daughters will say of her, when they quite realize the big fish has escaped them after I beg your pardon, my dear, to the duchess, who has six daughters somewhere about the room."

"Oh, don't apologize to me; my girls are all engaged, or in the nursery," says her grace, graciously. "And that young lady, Miss—Miss Grenville, is engaged to Lord Delamere. Indeed! Yes, she is a fortunate girl!"

"The fortunate girl!" meanwhile is still dancing with the greatest man in the county. The man who until a few moments ago she thought plain Hector Warren, and whom she cannot yet realize as a mighty earl. Her brain seems whirling, her heart throbs and palpitates; the magnificent room seems round, but yet he holds her in a firmly-gentle grasp, knowing that all eyes are watching her, and determined that they shall not see the dismay and bewilderment that he knows are dominant in her mind.

But presently, as some couples drop out of the circle of the dance, he stops, and gently taking her arm, leads her into the room of the ante-room, and closing the door, screened by a curtain, draws her to him; and looking down into her troubled eyes, murmurs:

"Speak to me, Signa, my darling, tell me you have forgiven me."

She tries to withdraw herself from him, but he holds her by main, though gentle, tender force.

"Speak!" he whispers. "Tell me that you think me inconsiderate, unfair, anything—but speak! I cannot bear to see you look like that, so full of doubt and—trouble. Will you not say that you forgive me, my darling?"

"Forgive!" she echoes, vaguely, putting up her hand and pushing the hair from her brow with a gesture of bewilderment; then she lifted her eyes to him.

"Is it true?" she murmurs.

"Is it true, dearest—that my name is Hector Delamere, instead of Hector Warren?"

"That you are—Lord Delamere?"

He inclines his head slightly.

"Yes; Signa; but will that make any difference? No, no, it cannot! Why should it? You would not give me cause to hate my name and rank worse than I do?"

"Name and rank!" she says; then she smiles. "I was not thinking of them," she says, simply, and with pure truth.

"Then you were thinking—"

He pauses, and in that moment of silence she remembers the story of the murdered man and the ruined girl—of Cassinella—the name flashes on her brain in letters of fire. The man she loves and is pledged to is the Lord Delamere whose wickedness is in every man's mouth, whose very name she has learned to fear, and almost to detest. Her face grows deadly white and her breath comes slowly.

Signa, he says, and his own face is pale and dark, and his voice stertorous. "Signa, I know what is passing through your mind; my love gives me the power of reading your every thought in your eyes. You are thinking of the evil you have heard of me. Is it not so?"

She does not speak, but a heavy sigh leaves her half-parted lips.

"I see," he murmurs. "You believe it all—the idle gossip of a scandal-

Tells Just What They Did For Her

WELL-KNOWN LADY MAKES A STATEMENT REGARDING DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

She Had Numerous Troubles, All of Which Came From Diseased Kidneys, and Found a Cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Ayre's Chief, Que. April 19.—(Special.)—Mrs. W. Coles Macdonald, of the Farm, a member of one of the oldest families living in this neighborhood has consented to give the public the benefit of her experience with Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"My trouble started from overwork," Mrs. Macdonald states, "and I suffered for two years. I was treated by a doctor, but the results were not satisfactory. My joints were stiff, I had cramps in my muscles, my sleep was broken and unrefreshing and I was heavy and sleepy after meals. I had bad headaches, my appetite was fitful and I was always tired and nervous. I was depressed and low-spirited. I had a bitter taste in my mouth in the mornings and I was often dizzy. I suffered with the least exertion and I often had sharp pressure or pain on the top of the head. Then rheumatism was added to my troubles. I have taken just two boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and they have done me good, not only in one way, but in many. Even my rheumatism is much better."

Mrs. Macdonald's symptoms all showed that her kidneys were wrong. If you have similar symptoms try Dodd's Kidney Pills.

MAN IS SHORTER. When Adam and Eve Lived They Were as Tall as Trees.

It was a French savant named Henion, who 200 years ago gave to the world authoritative statements as to the height of Adam and Eve. He said that the father of the race was 122 feet 9 inches high and Eve 117 feet 9 inches. He noted that from the creation of the enlarged editions of humanity degeneration had been rapid; that Noah was only twenty-seven, Abraham only twenty and Moses but thirteen feet in height.

According to this French authority, if the Christian dispensation had not arrested this decrease man by this time—200 years ago—would have been a mere microscopic object, and we may conclude that our time he would not have been at all. M. Henion did not give any explanation as to how he arrived at his estimate of the height of these ancients.

Perhaps the most gigantic story on record is that concerning an immense skeleton, said to have been in Skilly, which measured 30 feet in length. This story, however, carries its own refutation, as it is said that found beside this giant was his walking stick, which was thirty feet long and thick as a telegraph pole. A clever calculator made the estimate that a walking stick only thirty feet in length for a man who measured 30 feet would be as ridiculous as one of seven inches for a man of ordinary stature.

The head and heart, generally work in unison. About one man in a million can lose his heart without losing his head.

WHAT IS A COOK? She is a Bacteriologist for One Thing—Read This and See.

Madam, do you know that you are a bacteriologist? The chances are you don't. Every time a woman goes into the kitchen to cook, she becomes a bacteriologist in proportion as she is a good cook. Perhaps she will not call it that, but that is what she is, nevertheless.

It is well for people to understand that there is a lot of bacteriology about the kitchen and to study it as bacteriology. The process of making bread rise is inoculation, pure and simple. Bacteria is introduced into the mixture of salt and water and flour in the form of yeast, and this bacteria gets to work right away, forming a gas which causes the bread to rise. It is the heat and water that help things along. Mold and yeast belong to the same bacteriological families, and there are a lot of others of the same sort.

Of course most of us who cook don't know things by these terms. We do not know that when we put in the yeast we are inoculating the dough. And there may be a number of other forms of inoculation that we do not know of either.

But it is well for every woman to remember that she is the bacteriologist in charge of the family laboratory, and inform herself in ways the best she can find to the end that in her inoculations of the food with heat and salt and other chemicals she doesn't introduce other things that will inoculate into bacteria that are not nearly so healthful as the yeast that goes into the bread.

A clean kitchen and a clean cook make the finest sort of laboratory and bacteriologist for family uses.

He who does a good deed is instantly enabled. He who does a mean deed is, by the action itself, contracted.—Emerson.

A GOOD MEDICINE FOR THE SPRING

Do Not Use Harsh Purgatives—A Tonic Is All You Need.

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That is the way most people feel in the spring. Easily tired, appetite rickety, sometimes headaches, and a feeling of depression. Pimples or eruptions may appear on the skin, or there may be twinges of rheumatism or neuritis. Any of these indicate that the blood is out of order—that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you and may easily develop into more serious trouble.

Do not dose yourself with purgatives, as many people do, in the hope that you can put your blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system and weaken instead of giving strength. Any doctor will tell you this is true. What you need is a tonic that will make new blood and build up the nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can do this speedily, safely and surely. Every dose of this medicine makes new blood, which clears the skin, strengthens the appetite and makes tired, depressed men, women and children bright, active and strong.

Mrs. Maude Berg, Lombard, Sask., says: "I can unhesitatingly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a blood purifier and tonic. I was very much run down when I began using the Pills, and a few boxes fully restored my health."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail for 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A call has gone out to the High School boys of Ontario at the approaching seed time to assist the farmers of the Province in the production of food. A great deal will depend on our supply at the next harvest. The present high prices indicate that our food supply is "alarmingly low," in the words of Lloyd George. There is less than one man per 100 acres left on Ontario farms, due to the call of war. Our High School boys can help. The exercise will do them good, their physical stamina will be increased, they will be in every way benefitted, they will learn some things of the basic industry, agriculture, appreciate the farmer's point of view and incidentally acquire a lot of money in wages which will have the added joy of being earned by "the sweat of their brow." Now is the time to make your arrangements boys. The call of Spring is in the air.

WESCOTT—In loving memory of Henry Wescott, who passed away at his home April 14th, 1916.

Thou hast gone but one short year,
So long it seems to me!
Yet oft I feel thy spirit near,
So near I could speak to thee
One sweet day in that far-off land,
Where the many mansions be,
Wilt thou not be there on thy threshold
And welcome me home to thee?

MISS MANSFIELD

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Barradale was not able to get a vacation till October. On the 19th he went to a house a mile distant from a village, a house where they took summer boarders. The only other person there was a girl of nineteen who she was did not appear. She was not a member of the family. She did not reside there regularly. She spent most of the day in her room, and what she did there was not made known to Barradale.

One morning when Barradale started out for his accustomed morning walk, his landlady, Mrs. Stetson, asked him if he happened to go by the postoffice to bring the mail, adding that he was to give any letters that might come to her and no one else. Barradale called for the mail and noticed that it consisted of two letters, both for Miss Mansfield. They were addressed in masculine handwriting. Miss Mansfield was the young lady boarder. Barradale delivered the letters to Mrs. Stetson and thought no more about the matter.

Having nothing else to do, Barradale took long walks, stopping for long rests—that is, when the retreating summer got the better of the coming autumn and it was warm enough to sit still. On several occasions he passed the postoffice and always asked for the mail. There was usually a letter for Miss Mansfield, sometimes addressed in a woman's, sometimes in a man's handwriting. Miss Mansfield, weather permitting, took a walk in the afternoon. One afternoon, when Barradale had the mail in his pocket, he met her. Taking out the letters, he selected one for her, gave it to her and passed on. When he handed the other letters to Mrs. Stetson he mentioned that he had given one to Miss Mansfield. Mrs. Stetson frowned, but said nothing. The next day she told him that he need not trouble himself about the mail; she would get it herself. After that when he called at the postoffice he was given his own mail and no more.

There was no one in the house to interest Barradale except Miss Mansfield, and he longed to avail himself of her companionship. He noticed, however, that whenever he attempted to do so Mrs. Stetson thrust herself upon them. The consequence was that Barradale, noticing that Miss Mansfield walked in the afternoon, contrived to meet her and walk with her.

At first she demurred, saying that he was a stranger to her, and she was not used to the society of men. Girls should be very careful with whom they associate. However, she gradually thawed, and her prudence did not prevent her from making appointments to meet him without the range of Mrs. Stetson's watchful eye.

Put a young man and a young woman under the same roof with no other associates, and the result is usually the same. When Barradale went home he had received Miss Mansfield's permission to call upon her mother—she had no father—who lived in the same city as himself, to ask for her hand. The evening after his arrival he made the call. The house was a stone front, and a dignified elderly lady received him.

"Mrs. Mansfield?" he asked.

"I am Mrs. Mansfield."

"Mrs. Mansfield, I have been spending a month in the country, where I have met your daughter."

At this the lady became all attention. "I found her a charming girl," continued Barradale—"indeed, so charming that I fell in love with her."

"Were you at Mrs. Stetson's?" asked the lady sharply.

"I was."

"Mrs. Stetson assured me that her summer boarders had all returned to the city," snapped the lady.

Barradale was about to proceed with his application when Mrs. Mansfield broke in, talking partly to herself and partly to him.

"What shall I do with her? She's incorrigible. She got all the boys in the high school in love with her, and I packed her off to college to get her away from them. She had barely entered before she was expelled for breaking the rules. I managed to have the expulsion exchanged to suspension and rusticated her under the care of Mrs. Stetson. Mrs. Stetson has written me that Mabel has been getting letters from her lovers despite the fact that Mrs. Stetson has endeavored to intercept them. Did Mabel send you to me to ask for her?"

"She did."

"You are the seventh person she has sent me to ask for her in the past six months. If I had known that a young man had come to the same house in the country as she I would have warned him. Mrs. Stetson is very much to blame."

"No harm done. I assure you, Mrs. Mansfield," replied Barradale, outwardly untroubled. "I'm just of an age to cut my wisdom teeth. The experience will surely be of service to me."

"I wish you'd take her off my hands," said the lady ruefully. "The other have been boys; you are a man and might be able to control her."

"Thank you very much. Just at present I don't feel like relieving you, but when a man is once inoculated by a Cupid's arrow it's difficult to get the poison out of his system. Meanwhile I'll play her own game with her. I'll let her be severely alone for a while."

It so happened that Miss Mansfield played the same game two or three times. She is now Mrs. Barradale.

PREPARING THE SOIL

First Things to Do in Getting the Garden Ready.

FEW TOOLS ARE NECESSARY

Information on Digging, Planting, and Transplanting Which Will Help the Amateur to Get Started Right.

(By S. C. JOHNSTON, Vegetable Specialist, Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The soil is the workshop in which is found many of the constituents which go to make up plant food. These foods must be so treated that they will be in such a condition that they may be readily taken up by the slender rootlets of the plant so that the plant will thrive and mature.

It is possible to add some manure to your soil and work it up well before planting time. This manure may be obtained possibly from various sources close to your home; livery stables or farms dealing entirely with manure would be willing to supply it at a reasonable rate. On heavy soils it is particularly recommended that heavy applications be made in order that the soil will be of a much finer condition so that it will retain a large quantity of plant food. Many of the garden soils will be benefited by the application of lime. This may be secured from various sources such as the contractor and builder, lime and cement dealers, and may be in the form of fresh lime or even slaked lime. This lime should be scattered over the surface of the soil after the digging has taken place, and a sufficient amount should be applied to make the surface of the ground fairly white. The soil should be gently raked into the soil just previous to the planting of the seed.

DIGGING. It is necessary in all gardens that the soil be turned over at one time or another during the early spring in order that it may become dry and loosed. We find that many of the troubles of the backyard gardens are caused by digging the soil too early in the spring. One of the easiest ways to tell when the soil is ready for digging is to gather a handful and press the fingers over it. If the soil in the hand seems in a somewhat compact mass the time is not far enough advanced for commencing digging. If, however, the soil falls apart into several small parts we may rest assured that it is perfectly safe to dig.

TOOLS. It is unnecessary for the backyard gardener to purchase many tools for this first garden. Those who have been growing vegetables in their backyard for a number of years gradually add to their supply until after three or four years they have accumulated many special tools which are suited for particular operations in the garden. Complaints are sometimes heard that the expense necessary to commence a backyard garden is very great. Many good backyard gardens have been made and excellent harvests obtained with very few and comparatively inexpensive tools. A digging fork or spade, a rake, and a hoe are about all the tools essential at the outset, and these are inexpensive.

PLANTING OF SEEDS. When it has been determined that the soil is suitable for digging and the weather is nice and warm, it is necessary that the seeds be planted in the garden. As fine a surface as possible should be secured, so that the little seeds will quickly germinate and grow. To sow the seeds quickly, evenly, and thinly requires considerable practice and care. The row may be made straight by stretching fairly tight a piece of string from one portion of the garden to another and using this as a guide for making the trenches or drills for placing the seeds in. After the seeds have been dropped in they should at once be covered with soil by gently drawing some of the loose surface soil in over the seeds with a piece of stick or with the hands. This soil should, however, not be heaped over the row but should be placed evenly with the rest of the garden soil and packed down.

THINNING. Backyard gardeners should not attempt to grow immense quantities at first. It is necessary to plant sufficient seed to secure a good crop of plants, the more slender plants being thinned out soon after they are above ground so as to assure reasonable room for a good crop of healthier plants. The thinning should be commenced when the plants are from one to two inches in height and should not be left until the plants have become long and slender because if they are left one plant simply tries to smother another one out; whereas, if they are thinned to the proper distance they will have room to grow to their required size of maturity.

TRANSPLANTING. The city dweller will find it almost impossible to grow plants of first-class quality of such vegetables as tomatoes, celery or cabbages unless he has other appliances such as a hot-bed, which enables him to start the seeds very early in the spring and sows them before they are above ground. In order that he may secure early crops, it is good practice for him to purchase plants which may be taken to the backyard garden and transplanted or set out in the garden at a required distance and good healthy crops should be secured. When purchasing plants only sturdy and vigorous growing plants should be accepted. Tomato plants to give the best results should be about eight inches high, and the stalk should be as thick as a lead pencil and thicker if possible. If the plants are ready in bloom this may be considered a very good feature. The root system of the plants should be large and have about the same number of roots. When transplanting individual plants care should be taken to make sure that a good deal of soil is left around the root of each plant.

SELECTING THE TYPE OF WHITE BURLEY TO BE GROWN IN ONTARIO

There are two distinct types of White Burley now being grown in the Burley sections, namely: the original Broadleaf Burley and the Improved Standard Burley. The Broadleaf Burley, as the name indicates, is a large type with broad, drooping leaves, large veins, a heavy yield, and, on account of the large sap content of the leaves, it is inclined to cure up a little dark.

The Improved Standard is a somewhat smaller type than the Broadleaf Burley, with narrow, erect leaves, smaller veins, of a little finer texture than the Broadleaf, and, on account of a smaller sap content in the leaves, it is inclined to cure a little brighter colour. The narrow leaves also tend to decrease the percentage of wrappers in the Standup Burley.

Since the popularity of, and the returns realized from, any type of tobacco, depend largely on the quality of the cured product and the yield per acre, experiments were conducted at the Hagrow Tobacco Station during the past season to determine the merits of the two types. Four plots of ground with as nearly the same texture, character and fertility as possible were selected. Two of these plots were planted to Broadleaf Burley, and two to the Improved Standup Burley respectively. All four plots were planted at the same time, with plants as nearly uniform in size and vigour as possible; fertilized alike; cultivated alike; and harvested and cured under the same conditions. The following table gives the results obtained:—

TYPE OF BURLEY	PLOT NO.	YIELD PER ACRE IN POUNDS	% BRIGHT LEAF	% RED LEAF
Improved Standup	1	1073	79.2%	20.8%
Improved Standup	2	1125	83.4%	16.6%
Broadleaf	1	1370	72.3%	27.7%
Broadleaf	2	1228	79.5%	20.5%

Since the above table gives the results for only one year's experiments, and the past growing season was a very poor one, these results cannot be taken too conclusively. However, they are a fair indication that the yield obtained with the Broadleaf type is appreciably greater than the yield obtained with the Standup type and also that the increased percentage of bright leaf obtained with the latter, is hardly large enough to offset the increased yield obtained with the Broadleaf type.

However, with the Broadleaf Burley, especially, too much importance cannot be attached to getting the crop planted early, letting it ripen thoroughly before harvesting, having a well ventilated barn for curing, and properly regulating the ventilation during the curing season if a crop of good colour and quality is to be obtained.

SHE ASKED FOR CANDOR.

And Now He Wonders What Would Have Happened Had She Got It.

A woman with a birthday in sight spoke earnestly to three men who were her friends.

"Tomorrow will be another birthday for me," she said. "I know the freshness of my youth has departed, but I should like to know just how old I appear in the eyes of the world. Tell me, my dear friends, if you were looking on me for the first time what would be your impressions?"

Said the first man glibly: "I have known you for several years, and you appear the same as when I first saw you. Your beauty is undimmed; your charm is undiminished."

"Between friends I should say tomorrow would be your twentieth birthday."

Said the second man more slowly: "I, too, have known you for several years, but it seems to me you have been favoured by time. Your beauty has ripened and deepened until now you, who were once a lovely bud, are a lovelier rose in bloom. I should count tomorrow as the beginning of your twenty-fifth year."

"And you?" queried the woman of the third man, who had been regarding her with clear-eyed frankness. "Between friends there should always be truth," he replied gravely. "I acknowledge your beauty and your charm, and both have been wonderfully preserved in a semblance of youth. But you ask for candor, and you shall have it. Looking at you closely, I should not expect you to see thirty—after tomorrow."

The woman faced the three men who were her friends, and her eyes were gleaming while her cheeks' pink turned to crimson. She pointed an accusing finger.

"You have lied," she said tremulously, "and you also. But I will forgive you because you need to please me. But you"—she whirled toward the last speaker—"you are a barbarous egotist. You have wounded me in order to maintain your own reputation for veracity. Truth, indeed! Your honesty offends me. We are no longer friends. Go—and quickly!"

"Woe!" exclaimed the third man as he strode through the outer darkness. "I wonder what would have happened to me if I had really told her the truth!"—Ella Randall Pearce in L. A.

With Not Appreciated. Stubbs was feeling his way to the kitchen stove in the dark when he fell over the coal scuttle.

"Oh, John," called Mrs. Stubbs sweetly, "I know what you need. You should get what they have on battle-ships."

"What's that?" growled Stubbs as he rubbed his shins.

"Why, a range fender."

And what Stubbs said about woman's wit was plenty.

Public Streets. Under the Roman Dutch civil law the title to a public street was in the sovereign, and this rule obtained in New Netherlands until the country now comprising New York city was taken over by the English in 1664.

The English common law, on the other hand, left the title to a public street in the owner of the adjacent land, with only "the right of passage for the king and his people."

Old Trinity.

Old Trinity, as it is familiarly known, at Wall street and Broadway, in New York, is not so old as churches go. The first Trinity was erected on the site in 1697 and burned in 1776. And the second became unsafe in 1840, when it was demolished and the present church built.

TO ENCOURAGE PRODUCTION OF FOODSTUFFS

Mrs. Powell of the W. I. Branch of the O. D. A. Gives Interesting Address in Stirling Opera House

On Monday night a mass meeting of the citizens of Stirling and surrounding country was held in the town hall to discuss ways and means to encourage the production of food.

The chair was occupied by J. S. Morton, President of the Board of Trade who introduced Mrs. Powell of Whiteby, representative of the Women's Institute. Mrs. Powell gave an excellent and most interesting address on production and explained why special effort should be made in this direction. She said: "We do not realize fully the great need—we have not realized the serious situation we are facing. If there is such a shortage in the crops in 1917 as there was in 1916 that before the present supply is exhausted we will be facing famine—a world's famine. Have we realized that we in Canada are physically free from menace of the war. The increased burden of production which now falls upon this country because France, England and Italy depend upon us to furnish the food which in times of peace was secured from Russia, Roumania and Bulgaria, should be regarded as an added incentive to patriotic service. If this country does not raise a big crop this year not only will the people of Canada suffer, but the motherland her allies will suffer."

We must produce and conserve. Give up some of your work or comforts in the home in order to produce more food—you are doing a patriotic duty if you work your garden and produce food for your own table. 3000 soldiers wives are undertaking garden work this season.

Why not you? Produce and learn the conserving of foods properly.

In Russia 79% of the producers of food stuffs are fighting in the trenches. We can carry on that production as no other country can. Two years ago it required 5000 hogs weighing 150 lbs apiece to feed the army for one meal every day.

In Old London, war bread is used alike by rich and poor and if sold under twelve hours after baking a penalty of $50 is imposed. In the near future Canada will be facing meatless days. We must feed and keep up the strength of our men who are fighting for us, or we cannot win the war.

Every man and woman who has a spot of ground should see that it is cultivated. We must make every dollar fight for us. Every man, woman and child has a part in this war.

Strengthen the hands of our Empire by being Loyal, Patriotic citizens.

Mrs. Powell gave these recipes for canning corn and peas.

Corn—To 10 cups corn add 4 cup salt, 1 cup sugar, cover with boiling water and boil one hour. Put in glass jars.

Peas—To 4 cups peas add 4 cups water, 1 cup salt 1 cup sugar, boil 20 minutes. Before boiling blanch peas in scalding water about 15 or 20 minutes to take off outer shell, before putting in jars add one tablespoon fresh lemon juice.

Mrs. Powell will receive a hearty welcome should she again visit Stirling.

Prof. Auger, of Victoria University addressed the meeting also Rev. S. F. Dixon, W. S. Martin, L. Meiklejohn and Reeve Montgomery.

A motion was made by Mr. Meiklejohn seconded by Mr. Martin that a committee be appointed to co-operate with the Dept. of Agriculture to see that all available vacant lots are worked this season for production of vegetables.

The Committee appointed were A. D. McIntosh, F. T. Ward and G. G. Thrasher.

During the evening Mrs. Alger gave a patriotic solo and Miss Helen Morrison, a reading. The meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Wellman's W. I.

The re-organization meeting will be held at Mrs. E. Totter's, May 17th. All members are requested to be present. There will be an address by the President and District President.

Rhetorical Paws.

A would be politician was once speaking before a small assembly in a village. In the course of his speech he introduced some expression which disgusted his hearers, who thereupon started moving away. The orator, seeing this, put up his hands and said: "Fare ye, friends!" But the answer he got was from a local wag, who cried amid laughter: "Aye, an' real dirty ones they are too!"—Chicago News.

Dear Friend:

Just a line or two in answer to your socks. They came in nice and warm in the winter, and I thank you very much for those socks and here is a photo of the soldier that got your socks. Well, the war was not over when I got them. I think you are doing lots of work for us, and I hope the war will soon be over and give my love to all around Stirling. Well I guess I will ring off for this time, so bye bye, from your friend,

STORY OF A RANCH

By BARBARA PHIPPS

Inez was a little Mexican girl in southern California. There are many Mexicans there living peacefully under the United States government. They were there when California passed to Uncle Sam after the Mexican war, and they remained there.

Bob Atherton was a young New Yorker who went west to engage in ranching. He had been in the southwest a couple of months without seeing any woman except of low degree and proportionately homely, when he met Inez. She was rigged out in Mexican style, with a lot of gay colors and gold lace. Her eyes were very black and her lashes long. Her complexion was olive and her cheeks red.

The meeting occurred when the two were riding over the plains. Inez rode astride; her long black hair hung, a cable, under a man's sombrero. "Good morning, senorita," said Bob. "Good morning, senor," was the reply.

"Where are you going, senorita?" "Home. I have been out looking for some stray sheep. Have you any tobacco, senor?" Bob produced tobacco. Inez produced cigarette paper and rolled a cigarette on the flat topped pomel of her saddle.

"May I see you to your home?" asked Bob. "You may, senor."

That was the beginning of it. The next step was Bob and Inez sitting on a log on the bank of a stream. Bob took her hand in his. He failed to notice that it was short and thick and the skin was rough. He failed also to notice that the cable at her back was composed of very coarse hairs. There was nothing soft or silky about it. Putting one arm around her waist, he kissed her. Perhaps the really most attractive thing about her was the feminine turning of her head and drooping of her eyes.

Ten miles distant from Atherton's ranch was Chambers' ranch. Chambers was an eastern gentleman of wealth who had invested in a ranch, the management of which he delegated to another. About the time that Atherton had become spousa with Inez, Chambers visited his property, bringing with him his wife and their daughter, Clara. Miss Clara had been longing for a bit of ranch life and was delighted with it. The morning after her arrival she rode out on horseback with her father, inspecting his flocks. On the way they met Atherton and Inez. There are not so many people in that region as in New York, and when they meet they don't hurry on—they salute and often stop for a chat. Mr. Chambers reined in and asked Atherton some questions as to locations and other matters. Then there was some general conversation, in which Clara joined.

She was the first lady Bob had seen in months. From her he turned his eyes upon Inez. Great heavens! Could this dumpy, coarse little creature be the beauty to whom he had been making love? Inez was conscious of the change. She saw the difference between Miss Chambers and herself and its effect upon her lover. Bringing her skirt down on her horse's haunches, she bent him onward.

Atherton was annoyed. He regretted that he had been caught by the eastern girl in company with the Mexican. He was mortified that Inez should have left him in this abrupt manner, evidently jealous. He must either ride after her or let her go her way. He chose the latter course. Not only this, but when the others moved on he

That was the end of Atherton's romance. From the time he laid his eyes on Clara Chambers, he saw Inez as she was. He had not the assurance to drop the latter at once. He went to see her and tried to reassure her. He failed and that made matters worse. When a man is passing from one woman to another the surest way to snap their relations is for her to show jealousy. Inez did not improve matters. Bob gradually dropped her.

Naturally he sought the Chambers, who were of his own class, and for the same reason he was welcomed by them. Of course Inez was not ignorant of this.

One day when Bob was out looking after his sheep he saw Clara riding alone. He was about to join her when he saw Inez riding in the opposite direction from Clara. The two girls met, and Bob saw that something was being said between them. Then Inez pointed with her finger, Clara had evidently asked the way somewhere.

"Heavens!" exclaimed Bob in an agonized tone, and digging his spurs into his horse's flanks, he shot off toward Clara. She was going directly toward a quicksand. She was nearly two miles from Bob and a quarter of a mile from the quicksand. Bob was going like the wind, but before he could reach her her horse began to flounder. By the time he reached the margin of hard ground the animal was half immersed. Clara, who rode sideways, was still untouched by the sand. Bob released his lariat, which he always carried, and, whirling it, dropped the noose over her shoulders.

The horse was lost, but the woman was saved.

Neither Atherton nor Miss Chambers said a word to any one about Inez sending her rival over the quicksand. Clara went east within a few days. Bob left his ranch for parts unknown and never saw the Mexican girl again.

Dropping the Aspirate.

Dropping the aspirate in the combination "wh" has the support of three authorities on English pronunciation—the late Dr. Sweet, Professor Rippmann and D. Jones. This "h" by the way, does not follow an initial "w", except in the spelling. What those who do pronounce it really say is "hwich," "hwen," etc. In omitting the aspirate we are merely carrying on a process long established in English. Take, for instance, the words "lady," "loaf," "lean," "laugh," "neck" and "ridge." All were originally pronounced with an initial "h," which has now entirely disappeared. Even more violent consonantal changes have taken place. In "knife," "know," "gnaw" and "write" the initial "k," "g" or "w" was at one time pronounced "knife," for example, developed some thing in this way. "Knife," "knife," "knife," the first consonant being softened. Not so very long ago "knee" was pronounced "tnee" in Cumberland.—London Chronicle.

Language of Footprints.

Among the Indians the study of human footprints was carried to a fine point. Many of us would be able to say at a glance, "Here goes So-and-so," with perfect accuracy. Even the children would recognize instantly the footprint of a stranger from another tribe. It was claimed by some that character may be read from the footprint, just as some white people undertake to read it from the handwriting, on the ground that certain characteristic attitudes and motions of the body, reflecting mental peculiarities, affect the gait and consequently the pedal photograph. At any rate, our people were close readers of character, and I do not hesitate to say that faithful study of the language of footprints in all its details will be certain to develop your insight as well as your powers of observation.—Charles A. Eastman (Ojibwa) in St. Nicholas.

Letter of Condolance

Rawdon, April 2nd, 1917

GRI. B. JOHNSTON

Dear Bro:—

The Members of L. O. L. No. 509 assembled here to-night, wish to express to you their sympathy in your bereavement.

We realize that no words of ours can lessen the sorrow, no thought that human mind could express can remove the feeling of grief and loneliness caused by the death of your little child; but let us remind you that somewhere out in the great world beyond, there lives a Creator, that with him dwells our Saviour, who gave his life for the salvation of Mankind, and in Heaven the home of the Redeemed, the brightest gems among the Jewels of that everlasting world, are the little children that pure and undefiled by sin have by our Gracious Lord and Saviour in their tender mercy been gathered home.

Signed JOHN B. HAGERMAN,

Secretary.

Stood on His Dignity.

United States Senator Hoar in his autobiography relates an anecdote of Anson Burlingame, the famous lawyer of Detroit, who was afterward minister to China. He says:

"Shortly after Burlingame came into active life he made a journey to Europe. The American minister obtained for him a ticket of admission to the house of commons. He was shown to a very comfortable seat in the gallery. In a few minutes an official came to him and said he must leave that seat, that the gallery where he was was reserved for peers. They are very particular about such things there. Burlingame got up to go out, when an old peer who happened to be sitting by him and had heard what was said interposed. 'Let him stay,' he said; 'he is a peer in his own country.' 'I am a peer in my own country, sir,' replied Burlingame, and shall lose caste if I associate with peers.' And he went out."

Making Sure of It. District Visitor—Well, one must do something for the suffering poor. Friend—Quite so, but are you really quite sure that they do suffer? District Visitor—Oh, yes. I visit them and talk to them for hours at a time.—London Stray Stories.

Quite a Resemblance.

"Didn't you have a brother in this course last year?"

"No, sir; it was I. I'm taking it over again."

"Extraordinary resemblance, though. Positively extraordinary!"—Harvard Lampoon.

A Vegetable Garden for Every Home

IN this year of supreme effort Britain and her armies must have ample supplies of food, and Canada is the great source upon which they rely. Everyone with a few square feet of ground can contribute to victory by growing vegetables.

Four Patriotic Reasons for Growing Vegetables

1. It saves money that you would otherwise spend for vegetables.
2. It helps to lower the "High cost of living."
3. It helps to enlarge the urgently needed surplus of produce for export.
4. Growing your own vegetables saves labor of others whose effort is needed for other vital war work.

The Department of Agriculture will help you

The Ontario Department of Agriculture appeals to Horticultural Societies to devote at least one evening meeting to the subject of vegetable growing; manufacturers, labor unions, lodges, school boards, etc., are invited to actively encourage home gardening. Let the slogan for 1917 be, "A vegetable garden for every home."

Organizations are requested to arrange for instructive talks by practical gardeners on the subject of vegetable growing. In cases where it is impossible to secure suitable local speakers, the Department of Agriculture will, on request, send a suitable man.

The demand for speakers will be great. The number of available experts being limited, the Department urgently requests that arrangements for meetings be made at once; if local speakers cannot be secured, send applications promptly.

The Department suggests the formation of local organizations to stimulate the work by offering prizes for best vegetable gardens. It is prepared to assist in any possible way any organization that may be conducting a campaign for vegetable production on vacant lots. It will do so by sending speakers, or by supplying expert advice in the field.

To any one interested, the Department of Agriculture will send literature giving instructions about implements necessary and methods of preparing the ground and cultivating the crop. A plan of a vegetable garden indicating suitable crops to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free of charge to any address.

Write for Poultry Bulletin

Hens are inexpensive to keep, and you will be highly repaid in fresh eggs. Write for free bulletin which tells how to keep hens. Address letters to "Vegetable Campaign," Department of Agriculture, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

Shoes That Do Not Wear Out.

Esparto shoes, or shoes made of the toughest and strongest of the coarse esparto fibers, are still worn in Iberia and parts of Portugal. There is no shoe made which will outlast them, not excepting leather shoes. Indeed, one pair of esparto shoes has been known to outwear a dozen tanned hide soles. This is due to their faculty of picking up and retaining in their interstices stony particles. As fast as the pebbles are worn out they are replaced automatically by others. Thus a self-sufficing process is constantly going on. It is not uncommon in some parts of Spain or Portugal to hear the natives boast of wearing a pair of esparto shoes for twenty-five years or more.

Man With a Miscellaneous Past.

"We have been gradually growing accustomed, and especially of more recent years, to regard ourselves as a composite people—an amalgamation of several races and many nationalities," says the New Republic. "To illustrate that, the writer is fond of quoting Herbert Croly's characterization of Mark Hanna's ancestry. After describing how 'in his father's blood there was a Scotch-Irish, a Welsh and an English or Dutch strain and on his mother's side a French Huguenot, an Irish and an English infusion,' Mr. Croly concludes, 'He became by virtue, thereof a tolerably typical American, which means a man whose past is so miscellaneous that he is obliged to seek for himself some form of effective personal definition.'"

Texas produces in the neighborhood of 5,000,000 bales of cotton a year, yet the State turns out only enough cotton for her own use. This is not because there is shortage in material, but because her mills are so few and far between.

AND NOW FOR SEEDING

Soil Should Be Allowed to Warm Up a Little.

SOME FIRST CROPS TO PUT IN

Beans Are a Splendid Food Product to Grow This Year—How to Proceed in Several Lines.

City of St. JOHNSTON, Vegetable Specialist, Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

Having discussed the methods of preparing the garden soil for the seed, we now turn to the sowing of the seed itself. There is no need to hurry the sowing of the seed, but for results will be obtained if the amateur gardener will wait until the soil is warm and easily worked. The vegetables discussed are arranged as nearly as possible according to the time they should be planted.

LETTUCE. Lettuce is grown for its leaves, and is our best known salad plant. It is a short-season plant, and is often grown to follow or precede another crop. It is quite hardy and may be planted quite early in the spring, grown to maturity, and followed with a tender crop such as tomatoes, or it may be planted between any plants of the cabbage family. It is a good plan in a small garden to plant only a few feet at one time and follow this with successive plantings made every ten days or two weeks until July 1st. The lettuce seed may be sown in rows comparatively thin at a depth of a quarter of an inch. The plants should be thinned to stand two inches apart.

If one desires large single heads of lettuce the plants should be thinned to stand from seven to nine inches apart. The thinnings may be transplanted to another part of the garden.

RADISH. The radish plant is grown for its roots, which are eaten raw just as soon as they are large enough to use. It is quite hardy, and may be planted very early in the spring. Radishes are frequently sown with other crops which are not such rapid growers, such as parsnips. They should, however, be pulled out before the parsnips or other crops need the ground. Successive planting is also advised for this crop. Radish seed may be planted in rows, four inches apart or broadcasted, the depth preferred being from a quarter to half an inch only. Radish as a general rule require no thinning, and the soil between the rows should be kept loose with the hoe. A crop of winter radish may be obtained if the seed is sown about the first of August. These should be thinned out to three inches apart.

SPINACH. Spinach is a short-season crop which is grown to provide table greens. The plant matures in about six weeks from planting, and seed should be sown very early in the spring, as the plants run to seed during the hot summer months. The seeds may be planted in rows or broadcasted, and should be sown at a depth of one half inch. Successive planting may be made if so desired. When the leaves are large enough to use they may be pulled off or the whole plant may be cut from the root.

ONION. The onion is grown for seasoning, pickling, and for eating raw. A large percentage of onions stored for winter use are grown from seed planted in the soil very early in the spring. The soil should be rich, moist and well drained, but fresh manure is not the best to apply. The seeds should be planted at a depth of about one-half inch, and the rows should be from twelve to fourteen inches apart. The seed should be planted very thinly so that there will be no need for extra thinning of the onions. Cultivation should cease when the onion tops are such a size as to prevent easy work. In the fall when the tops are about two-thirds down the onions should be pulled and laid in windrows so arranged that the bulbs are covered with the tops of the onions. This prevents any sunburn which causes considerable trouble in storage. After they have been kept in this position for five or six days they may be gathered up and placed in a slat box or basket and tied up some way so that the rain will not get at them and the wind will have plenty of chance to circulate around the bulbs. When the onions are removed from the soil at this time it is so desired, or they may be left on. Dutch sets may be planted as close together as they will stand in a straight row very early in the season. They should be barely covered with soil, which should be well tamped by tramping on it, and the green onions should be pulled as soon as they are ready for use.

PEAS. Peas may be planted very early in the season, and for the early crop the seed should be sown in a furrow of two inches deep, and the seeds placed an inch apart. Some arrangements should be made so that the pea vines will have some support. Limbs of trees or chicken wire may be used for this purpose, as the vines will cling to this for support and will be kept up from the ground. This support should be placed at the time of planting. This soil should be drawn up around the vine.

BEANS. Generally speaking, it is not a good practice to add fresh manure to the soil where one expects to grow beans. They prefer a moist, deep loam. The seeds should be planted fairly early in the spring. The rows being at least eighteen inches apart. A furrow two inches deep may be made with the corner of a hoe and the seeds placed from two to three inches apart in the bottom of this furrow. Another way which is sometimes followed in planting beans is to make holes two inches deep twelve inches apart and in each hole three or four seeds be placed. It is always advised not to touch the plant when they are wet.

How the Captain Tacked.
Captain Joshua Stinson, the famous solitary voyager, tells in his "Sailing Alone Around the World" an amusing story of the way in which he protected himself at night from marauding sea-monsters in the neighborhood of Cape Horn. When he went to sleep Captain Stinson would sprinkle the deck with carpet tacks, taking particular care that not a few of them stood "business end" up. It is well known that one cannot step on a tack without saying something about it. A pretty good Christian would whisper, a savage would howl and claw the air. And that was just what happened. Stinson reports, about 12 o'clock one night. His vessel was boarded while he slept. But no sooner had they stepped on deck than the savages, howling like a pack of hounds, jumped pell-mell, some into their canoes and some into the sea, a great deal of free language including such as "the white man" Stinson says that he was never disturbed again, though he sprinkled his deck with tacks many nights thereafter.

Winks and Eye Baths.
Every few seconds we wink both our eyes at once, although not purposefully. If we stop winking our eyes become uncomfortable and gradually cease to work as they should. When the eye is at the front of it is exposed to dirt and dust and is apt to become so dry that a painful stinging sensation results or would do so if constant moisture were not provided to cleanse and soothe the tissues. As a matter of fact, each time we wink we wash the eye, says the Popular Science Monthly. Up above each eye is a tiny bag called the tear gland, and all the time we are awake it makes tears. When the front of the eye feels itself becoming a little too dry or dusty, a communication is sent for a supply of moisture. The eyelid then comes down with a tear inside it to wash clean the front of the eye. This is the most gentle and perfect washing in the world.

Safety of a Ship.
The safety of a ship depends upon its stability, strength, water tightness and reserve stability and floatability if injured. The strength is due to the framing and plating or planking. Water tightness is effected by caulking the seams between plates and planks. The seams of iron plates are caulked by hammering the edge of the uppermost plates against the one underneath it. The seams between planks are partly filled with oakum, which is forced in and the remainder of the seam filled with pitch, marine glue or putty. The reserve stability and floatability when injured depend upon the position and volume of the interior space which is flooded. To reduce this volume to a safe point vessels are divided into compartments by water tight bulkheads, which extend across the ship at intervals.

Redwood and Fire.
Probably no other wood burns with more resistance than California redwood. It seems to have been made fire resistant by nature. In logging camps this is peculiarly noticeable, for no other wood could be so treated. Because of the enormous size of redwood trees the logs are very heavy—a sixteen foot butt log weighs from thirty to fifty tons—and it is very difficult to handle them when the ground is littered with bark, undergrowth and tops. To get rid of this waste, or "slash," as the lumberman calls it, he simply sets it on fire. The slash burns off, but the logs do not burn. They come through this test by fire, which lasts from eight to ten hours, with merely a slight char on the sapwood on their exterior.

Wrinkled Prunes.
Personally we'd rather remain fat than to fall off suddenly and look wrinkly like a stewed prune.—Kansas City Star.
It is the unsteved pruned that is wrinkly. Stewed prunes are plump. Where do you board?—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
Darn it, the landlady assured us twice, very positively, that they had been stewed.—Kansas City Star.
Stewed twice, perhaps.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Not at All Plain.
"What is your husband's name, madam?" asked the polite directory canvasser.
"John Smith," responded the lady.
"Plain John Smith, eh?"
"No, indeed! John is the handsomest man in this town."—London Answers.

Crawford—You spoke of opening a bank account in your wife's name in order to teach her the value of money. How did it turn out? Crabshaw—She used it up to pay a lot of bills—She had staved off for six months.—Exchange.

"You claim to be an expert in scientific research," sneered his wife.
"What of it, woman?"
"And yet every day I have to find your spectacles for you."—Exchange.

Letter from Garnet Bailey

The following letter has been received by Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Bailey from their son, Garnet, who left with the 80th Battalion, France, March 30th.

Dear Mother and Father:
Your letter of March 28th received today. Just now we are billeted in a small town only four miles from the front. Very few shells have damaged the place though the greater part of the civilian population have left. Those who still hold out keep estimates (drinking houses) or stores where from the exorbitant prices they ask, they make more money than they did before the war. Yesterday I helped an old farmer next door, load his crop of wheat for the market. His entire crop consisted of thirteen sacks each containing about three bushels. We loaded it into his good load with the great wheels and heavy woodwork. The team, the only redeeming feature of the outfit were a fine pair of grey in the back and leave in shudder and neck.

Every farmer here keeps splendid horses to which they are very kind and considerate. Single horses are guided chiefly by word of mouth though a single rein is generally carried. All the more modern farm implements such as mowers and binders are made by American firms, however they are very scarce as usually the grain is cut with the scythe. The only machinery I remember seeing on the farms in Belgium were ploughs and harrows.

A funny thing about most of the ploughs, they consist of really two ploughs, one set on top of the other so that when the out of the furrow is reached the plough is just turned over and they come back in the old furrow. The threshing is done either by flail or horse power; only once have I seen threshing done by steam power in this country. The quality of grain produced is excellent, not owing to the general efficiency of the farmers but to the fertility of the soil. A rich black loam lying from two to ten feet deep over a strata of chalk makes France a very fertile garden for fertility.

The underlying strata of chalk extends over nearly the whole of Northern France reaching from the chalk cliffs of Dover, Eng. south past Albert and Bapaume. Chalk quarries are to be seen everywhere. From these places the stone is brought out in huge chunks and sawed into blocks for building material. Some of the most beautiful buildings I have seen were made from these blocks of chalk.

Beautiful carvings, statues and monuments are also made from this chalk. The houses in Belgium, France and Belgium are not so light and cheery as the ones we build at home, though the rooms are large, their small deep set windows, unpapered walls and tiled floors, give them a dreariness not becoming to our ideas of what a home should be.

Here we see no carpets on the floors, no white linen or lace curtains, the rooms are absolutely devoid of any color scheme that adds brightness and cheeriness to the home.

Now you must not be left to think that all the homes in France and Belgium are such as I have just roughly described. I was referring to the residences of the poorer class, the working people. Those of the more wealthy are much the same as ours at home. They have the same cloth, the same piano and victrola the same as we are accustomed to at home or in England.

The homes of the more wealthy, the counts and nobles are built generally in the country or some large estate where they have their own forests for hunting and fishing, their game to work their land, attend their lawns, horses, dogs.

These men set up a little independent world of their own, where they reign supreme over all they possess. I have told you I think, in previous letters, about the manners and customs of the people here and my opinion of them.

My heart goes out in sympathy to the people near the firing line here, struggling as they are to make a living with sons, husbands and sweethearts fighting and dying for the protection of their country, with friends and relatives being tortured and oppressed in their own land, attend their lawns, horses, dogs.

These men set up a little independent world of their own, where they reign supreme over all they possess. I have told you I think, in previous letters, about the manners and customs of the people here and my opinion of them.

KILLED AT TRENTON

Terrible Fatality by Electrocutation on Sunday Morning on Electric Line. Wm. Hawkins of Stirling has Narrow Escape.

The town of Trenton was shocked on Sunday morning by a fatality which occurred on the Electric Company's line at the Trent River crossing on the east side of the river, when John Osborne, of Belleville, lineman, was electrocuted and Wesley Todd was seriously burned that his recovery is not certain.

Hawkins, of Stirling and Osborne and Todd were engaged in ordinary line work and had protected themselves against accident in the usual manner. The lines had been "dead" an hour and a half during which time the men were engaged. The ground chain was hanging over the wires to prevent accident. From eight o'clock the men had worked away on separate poles until 9:30 a.m. when trouble suddenly 6,000 volts was turned on the wire and then off. Where it came from no one knew, but apparently from the east side.

John Osborne was apparently working below with his head near the wires. He fell to the ground in a heap. His hat had touched the wire and his head was terribly burned on the right side of the scalp. He appeared to be dead.

Wesley Todd, who is a young man of nineteen or twenty years, from Millbrook, was caught among the wires and hung apparently lifeless on the arms of the pole. He was got down to the ground by means of a rope.

The third lineman, Hawkins was among the wires but was not injured. At once the pulmotor was got and set to work on the men. For two hours willing hands assisted in the attempt to revive Osborne but without avail. For one half hour he seemed to show signs of life in moaning, but all efforts failed. His brain had been evidently badly burned by electricity.

Todd seemed to be dead, showing no spark of life, but by the aid of the pulmotor he was brought to consciousness. His right arm, chest and shoulder were terribly burned. In his left shoulder was a hole and his hands were both badly burned. He was taken to the emergency hospital in the Company's Trenton plant.

John Osborne had been working for the company since last summer. He was about 40 years old and leaves a widow and large family residing on Crier St., Belleville. The remains will be interred at Madoc, his former home. It is not expected that Todd will recover.

An inquest will be held into the fatality.

SAVE THE HEIFER

Number of Cattle Decreasing. Price of Food Rising

The first step to reduce the high cost of food, according to W. Scott Matthews, state dairy and food commissioner of Illinois, should be the passage of a federal law forbidding the sale of heifers.

While the population of the United States has increased 24,000,000 in the last fifteen years, the number of cattle has decreased 6,000,000. If the 2,500,000 heifers now slaughtered annually were allowed to bear, they would be ancestors of 45,000,000 cattle in five years.

"Milk is one of our most important staples and it costs far less for its actual food value than meat or wheat. Approximately 98 per cent of our farms are understocked because slaughter houses will pay larger prices for calves."

Letters of Condolence

The following letters were received by Mrs. A. A. Haggerty, and give an account of the death of her husband, who was a son of Mrs. Alex. Reid, of Ivanhoe.

France, Feb. 10th, '17

Dear Mrs. Haggerty,
You have my warmest sympathy in the heroic death of your beloved husband, Sergeant Major A. A. Haggerty, No. 412071, of the 4th Bata. He was instantly killed by a German sniper on Feb. 9th, 1917. He was buried by me today in the Villers-Aux-Bois military cemetery. His grave is No. 3, Row B, Plot 7. It will be marked by a nice wooden cross, which will be suitably inscribed. All has been done that could be done.

We all share with you the great loss we have sustained in the demise of such a brave fellow. Our hearts ache with grief as we witness the departure of so many precious lives, yet we cannot help but feel that the human sacrifices are making today are a true and noble cause. His without doubt a righteous one.

I realize the sorrow of your stricken heart, and I feel my utter weakness in helping you to carry the heavy burden, yet it is marvellous with what fortitude so many of our bereaved people all over the British Empire are facing their great tribulations. Sorrow not only one but several. I am sure you will do the same. Anything further I can do for you please let me know.

I am yours very sincerely,
Chas. R. Gunning,
Chaplain, 40th Bata.

France, 16, 2, 17.

Mrs. D. HAGGERTY, Toronto, Can.

Dear Madam:
It is with great regret that I write to you regarding the death in action of your husband, No. 412071, O.S.M., A. A. Haggerty. This occurred on the 9th of this month. At the time he was in an advanced post carrying out his work of inspection, when he was struck by a sniper's bullet and instantly killed. His now lies in the military cemetery at Villers-Aux-Bois where his grave has been marked and will be properly cared for.

I wish to express my regret at his loss. He was with us not very long but during that time he earned the esteem of all members of the Battalion and was highly thought of by the Officers of his Company. I was prepared to place the utmost confidence in him. I also wish to express to you my sympathy for the loss of your husband.

Yours sincerely,
H. J. Dawson, Lt.-Col.
O.C. 40th Bata.

THRILLING STORIES OF AERIAL WAR

Boysish British Fliers Dare
Much to Blind German Gunners.

TAKE BIG ODDS

And Usually Come Out Best in Vivid Combats.

(By Philip Gibbs.)
War Correspondent's Headquarters in France, Cable.—In the daily reports, a brief picture has been given of the battle which has raged in the skies while the earthmen have been struggling below.

Truly, during these last few days our air service has fought very wonderfully, and some day one of these young men who fly out to engage the enemy's planes or to search out and signal the position of hostile batteries, or to stoop low and scatter infantry and machine-gunners with a shower of bullets, must write the tale of it all. There have been hours when I have heard overhead the continual tattoo of Lewis guns, and when a great sweep of sky has been tracked out with white shrapnel clouds, following our flying squadrons, engaged hotly with hostile machines. One cannot follow the progress of these aerial battles. It is only rarely that one can distinguish the enemy machine from ours except by the cloudlets of our anti-aircraft barrage, but far and high one sees the enemy's planes, looking like blue specks against the sky, touched by sunlight, so that for a moment they are all golden or glistening or white as snowflakes, and down to come the low droning of the engines and the little hammerlocks of the Lewis machine guns. One soldier on the ground stare up at the war above their heads so aloof from them, so dream-like, and the men on the supply columns get their glasses out and laugh when one of our kite balloons is hauled down suddenly with great haste. Old Hun-per has got the wind up, they say.
"A Boche plane must be sneaking around."

It is no joke when a German airman descends out of a cloud and hovers over a battery signalling back to his guns. I was in such a state the other day and the soldiers on the ground below a bank white shrapnel bullets from our own "Archies" whirled the air about the red wings that have come into the sky, for the new German fighting machines have crumpled the old German planes. Yet butterflies when the sun is on them.

Enemy airmen have been trying to compete with our own by swooping low above marching troops and gun teams, and using their machine guns in a way which adds new perils to the war, but though they fly behind their own lines with great skill and courage they do not come over our country in any such numbers as our men invade theirs. This is not a judged statement, but the strict truth and our airmen go daily far back across the German lines, taking thousands of photographs, engaging enemy squadrons so that they are held back from the line of battle, and dropping tons of explosives upon ammunition dumps, railheads and transport.

The boys, for they are absurdly young in average age, like all these deadly risks and all this work of terror with the same spirit as the young gentlemen of England who rode out with Sir John Chando and Sir Walter Munny to seek combat with French knights many hundred years ago along the roads where our modern men-at-arms go marching today.

During this recent fighting one of them challenged a German Albatross, who accepted fight, and for an hour
they did every trick known to flying—stalling, banking, side-slipping and looping—in order to get in the first shot. It was the German who fired first, though he showed himself the master of his machine. There are boys in our air service who have killed six or seven Germans in a single combat, a few who have accomplished a more daring feat by going for a morning's hunting of men as though on a road, and they know the risks and the fortune of war. They cannot have all the luck all the time. When the turn comes it is quick to the end, or it left alive they do amazing things up there in the high skies to save a final crash.

A few evenings ago two of our young officers were attacked by five hostile aircraft and both were wounded, one in seven places, but they destroyed one of the German aeroplanes and landed safely, though their own machine was riddled by many bullets.
Another evening the battle of Arras two hostile aircraft were engaged by one of ours and forced to land, though one of our officers had his collarbone broken by a machine-gun bullet.

Day after day these episodes are reported and the machines of the officers do not come home, but when an other day comes our air squadrons rise again and fly over the storm of the battlefield. As I see them in the winter over Arras and away there is no remembrance except when a tale is told in the night of bombing raids. There is no exultant joy in struggling through a snowstorm to drop high explosives on a distant town. During this battle of Arras our airmen have made thousands of flights over the enemy lines, have engaged in hundreds of combats with hostile squadrons, and at the cost of their own lives in many cases have saved our infantry great losses by keeping down the fire of the German batteries, destroying their kite balloons, signaling preparations for the German counter-attacks, photographing the enemy's trenches and positions, and blinding his own power of observation to some extent at least by clouding his aeroplanes away from them on a day when the British infantry is not hard pressed.

It is good to pay this tribute to the flying men, whose exploits are not much recorded, although particularly ways overhead, and though the droning song of their engines is always the accompaniment of battle down below.

IN BULGAR HANDS.

Canadian Airman a Prisoner
—Burned His Machine.

London Cable.—News has been received from Lieut. J. C. Farish Owen, son of Mr. S. M. Owen, K. C., of Annapolis, N.S., to the effect that he is a prisoner in the hands of the Bulgarians. In a letter to his brother, who is also a lieutenant in the Royal Flying Corps in England, Lieut. Owen states that he and the commander of his airship made a flight across the enemy lines and that a hot battle ensued, in which Lieut. Owen's machine was hit, obliging him to descend to the enemy lines. Lieut. Owen managed to set the machine afire on reaching the ground. Lieut. R. W. Cross, of Winnipeg, another flying corps officer, reported missing recently, is now reported by the German Red Cross to be their prisoner. His machine was hit while chasing the enemy to their side of the line.

DOWN ON THE HUN.

Danes Resent Their Course
Beyond Britain's.

Copenhagen, via London, Cable.—
The announcement in the Nord Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung that the German Government is willing to negotiate with Spain over certain concessions in connection with the submarine war has aroused deep interest in Denmark. The increasing toll taken of Danish ships, particularly among those sailing from America to Denmark with urgently needed foodstuffs, is steadily augmenting the feeling against Germany. The anti-German sentiment now outbalances the resentment caused by the British blockade.

"WE WILL WIN ARRAS BATTLE"

Says Director of British Military Operations.

Waiting for Guns, but Working Like Machine.

London Cable.—"The German official statement a couple of days ago," said General Maurice, "announced that a great defeat had been administered to the British. It further claimed that we had attacked on a 15-mile front and failed completely. If the Germans de-fated us we naturally shall not be able to maintain our position in that section, but I ask you to wait a little and see whether the British refute this claim by their action."

"As to the 15-mile front, we made an attack on just half that distance, and we have been successful. The fact that we appear to remain stationary from time to time should not worry anyone. Depending as much as we are on the use of artillery, it is necessary for us to consolidate our positions and bring along our guns as we progress. We are continually launching heavy German counter-attacks, and it would be useless loss of British life to push on without artillery protection."

"When the second phase of the battle began we forced the Germans back on both our wings, while in the centre they succeeded in pushing us back a little. However, we counter-attacked and drove the Germans out of all the positions they had gained in the centre, and inflicted great losses on them."

"It is worthy of note that recently there has been much open fighting, and in this the British have shown themselves to be more than a match for the Germans, who were supposed to excel in this department."

"Our superiority in artillery is due not so much to an excess in the number of guns as to superior gunnery and a plentiful supply of munitions.
We are getting the results of the efforts of the munition workers at home, for great quantities of guns and munitions are being poured into France."

Gen. Maurice was asked if there was any imminent probability of a German attack on Italy and Russia. He replied, "That is always a possibility," he replied, "and I presume the question as to whether such an attack will be made will be settled on the Arras battlefield. If we win, as we are sure we will, then they will not be able to carry out a big assault on other fronts."

The German newspapers are claiming victory in the battle of Arras, telegraphs the correspondent at The Hague of the Evening News.

The Frankfurter Zeitung says: "The second battle of Arras can never be made good by the British, who lost it at an enormous cost in men and material."

The Cologne Volks Zeitung says: "German troops look across fields piled with corpses of the British army, which they have repelled successfully."
The Cologne Volks Zeitung says: "The Siegfried position has become an elastic band, a living wall which has dissolved the physical and moral strength of the enemy."

DEADLY WORK WITH BAYONET DESPITE MODERN ART OF WAR

Britishers With the Cold Steel Take German Position That Held Out.

Four Desperate Assaults Resisted, but Cold
Steel Won the Day.

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

With the British Armies in France, Cable.—Despite all the wondrous war weapons modern science has created, the cold steel of the bayonet has asserted itself anew in much of the recent bitter fighting as the struggles about Monchy-le-Proux since Monday have attained an intensity unequalled by any of the fighting in the Somme campaign last year.

There was one German position north of the town and paralleling the Scarpe River, which resisted four deperate attacks. It was finally decided to take this position at the point of the bayonet, without a shot of any kind being fired to rob the attack of its surprise nature. The attack was made along a three-quarters of a mile front under cover of darkness.

A COMPLETE SURPRISE.
The British battalions were formed in comparatively close order, and at the whispered word of command, repeated along the line, trudged forward into the night. Grim and silent figures they were, some in kilts, some in plain khaki, each man wearing a steel helmet, each having a firm grip of his rifle with fixed bayonet, the polished surface of which, however, caught no reflecting glint in the enveloping darkness.

Overhead, shells were droning, and back of the lines guns could be heard.
But it was only a desultory bombardment going on, and there were fleeting intervals of strange quiet just where the determined line of British troops were approaching their unsuspecting gray-clad foes.

Four unsuccessful daylight assaults had left a touch of chagrin which was to be wiped out in this "getting."
There is little more to tell. The sound of the fighting in the trenches was lost. The British barrage which closed down some distance behind the German position immediately the British signalled that had entered the position. The barrage cut off any German who attempted to flee from the bayonet clutch.

ALL OVER IN TEN MINUTES.
Thus in ten minutes with the cold bayonet was secured a position which had held out for two days.

The bayonet also has come in effectively in dealing with the ever troublesome machine gun. A few times in the night, have been able to accomplish much.

Several British battalions have reported in the past few days that the Germans are again employing the old "kammerad" ruse, suddenly standing up in the shallow trenches and shouting across to their opponents that they would surrender. Two battalions, believing the sincerity of this proposal, started across to bring in the prisoners, but were immediately attacked.

Incidents like this helped matterially to give the statement of bitterness to the fighting to a degree which has startled even those men who have been in the battles since the first German rush through Belgium.

BAYONET TRAINING.

The British have given unceasing attention to the bayonet fighting drill in the past two years. The month of training in England has been supplanted by post-graduate training in France, and continued as the units passed down through the corps into divisions, brigades and battalions. The night before the Arras attack some extraordinary feats could be heard giving their points of instruction. One of these feats formed a curious picture in the moonlight, where all the air was electric with preparations for the coming clash at dawn.

Traffic along the choked road leading toward the point of contact with the enemy suddenly stopped because of a temporary block. The throbbing motor engines were throttled down to an almost inaudible purr; the tired horses dragging army wagons or artillery limbers stood with the stillness of dead animals. Their drivers' heads dropped limp as they watched a few moments of sleep. The mystic sort of silence which settled down was broken by the raucous voice with which sergeants always impress their wondering subordinates.

This particular sergeant's men were facing each other for thrust and parry exercise. They were not to take part in the first rushes of the morning, but going in later in the day, to press the attack on the third and fourth lines. And there was yet time to give them final advice.

RANG LIKE STEEL.
The sergeant's commands seemed to have a ring in them like the clashing of the steel they directed. "Come along, come along," he said, "let me see a little more vigor in these eyes.
Get some more vigor in these eyes.
Your blooming rifle ain't no
baby."

The sergeant gave much more telling advice than this, and the drill ended with great chaffing. The correspondent stopped the sergeant as he came along the road, and asked:
"Will your men remember all that?"
"No, sir, they won't remember it all," was the frank reply, "but what they do remember will help."

VIMY TROPHIES FOR DOMINION

To Be Exhibited at Various Fall Fairs.

Huns Testify to Canadian Gunnery.

(By Stewart Lyon,
Canadian Press Correspondent with the Canadian Forces.)

Canadian Headquarters in France,
Cable.—A varied assortment of Vimy trophies, machine guns, minors and field guns, are being prepared to be shipped out to Canada. These will be a feature of the Fall fairs.

From the dugouts of Vimy ridge and from prisoners taken there were obtained many letters, diaries and other documents, indicating the efficiency of our preparatory artillery fire, as well as the accuracy of our information on which it was based.
Some of these have been translated.
They prove that the enemy had heavy losses in men and material before the infantry were moved upon him, and that even more serious was his loss of confidence as he saw his trenches blown away and his guns buried.

"Hell is lost loose." In this phrase a German gunner chronicled on March 31st the opening of our artillery attack.

The record of a trench mortar battery shows that day after day the mortars were buried. Day after day the patient gunners dug out their weapons, only to have them buried again deeper than before. In despair, the day before the assault, a gunner wrote:

"Everything is buried, the entrance

BRITISH GOT THE BREMEN

German Merchant Sub. a Prize of the Nets.

N. Y. Sun Correspondent
Saw Her in Dock.

The German merchant submarine Bremen, sister vessel of the Deutschland, which twice visited this country, is in the hands of the British,
according to a special correspondent of the Evening Sun, who returned aboard the St. Louis. Proof that came to him through three sources established to his satisfaction that the undersea craft was captured on her mail trip. He heard during his stay in England that the Deutschland also had been seized and that Capt. Paul Koenig and his crew were prisoners in a camp in the north of England. However, he could gather no specific facts about this vessel.

He was told about the Bremen by a British naval officer of high rank.
The details of her capture were related by this officer, who showed a photograph of the submarine. The picture showed the same contour of body and the same type of conning tower and general superstructure as the Deutschland. The officer also related that the capture was made from another naval officer and also from an American manufacturer who has a factory in Scotland. The latter said he saw the Bremen laid up in one of the yards. In all three stories the circumstances of the capture are identical.

"I confess I was sceptical about the stories of the Bremen's capture," narrated the manufacturer. "I didn't believe that they might be true. But until I went to the port where the vessel was said to be tied up, I went there on official naval business for the British Government and heard so many sensational stories about Ger-man's captured blockade runner that my curiosity was aroused."

"I asked a certain Admiralty officer to tell me the plain truth about the Bremen, and he asked me if I would believe my own eyes. I said I was perfectly willing to take his word, but would be only too glad of an opportunity to see the vessel myself. We got in the taxi and it wasn't long before I was looking at the great ship from inside. There are a number of interesting things about her capture that I am not likely to discuss, but I can tell you that the submarine I saw was the Bremen and that she was captured through becoming entangled in a new cable net. She was running and moored at the time and her diving planes near the bow got caught in the mesh of the net.

The submarine probably made frantic efforts to free herself, because when found her stern was far out of the air. Both her screws being in the air I understand that one of the German officers could try pumped their ballast tanks dry with a view of raising a part of the vessel to the surface so that the men could be sent on deck to clear the plane of the net.
That was impossible, as the net was too heavy and too firmly anchored.
An accident to the machinery caused the vessel to fill the engine room and it was necessary to close the water tight doors, seven men losing their lives.

Another story had it that Capt.
Schmidkopf was among the survivors. New York Herald.

U-BOAT TOLL WAS HEAVIER

40 Ships Over 1,600 Tons
Sunk in Last Week.

More Vessels Successful in Escaping.

London Cable says.—The weekly statement of vessels sunk as made public this evening shows that 40 vessels of over 1,600 tons each were sent to the bottom by mines or submarines.
Weekly shipping returns: Arrivals,
2,586; sailings, 2,821.

Sinkings by mines or submarine, over 1,600 tons, 40, including two sunk in the week ending April 15, under 1,600 tons, 15, including one sunk in the week ending April 15.

Vessels unsuccessfully attacked, 27, including one attacked the week ending April 8.

Fishing vessels sunk, 9, including one sunk the week ending April 15.
The above report shows the greatest number of merchant vessels reported sunk by submarine or mines in both categories—1,600 tons and over, and under 1,600 tons—made public by the British Government since it has issued its weekly statement of shipping losses. The previous reports were as follows:

	Over 1,600 tons.	Under 1,600 tons.
February 28	15	6
March 7	14	4
March 14	14	4
March 21	16	8
March 28	16	7
April 4	18	13
April 11	17	12
April 18	19	9

The report also shows that more vessels were successful in evading attack, the figures being 27 against 19, the previous high figure during any week. The arrivals and departures of steamers from British ports average fairly well with those of the preceding weeks.

TURKS ROUTED IN MESOPOTAMIA

Gen. Maude Strikes Again, and Wins Victory.

Enemy Driven Back Another Ten Miles.

London Cable.—An official statement received to-day from General Maude, commanding the British forces in Mesopotamia, says that the British have driven the Turks from the west bank of the Shatt-el-Adh to about 17 miles north of its junction with the Tigris. General Maude's total captures on Saturday and Sunday in the vicinity of Istabulat were 100 prisoners and 15 guns. (Concerning the actions in the vicinity of Istabulat and on the right bank of the Tigris the statement says:

"The full list of our captures for the two days, including those already reported, is 20 officers, 667 men, 1 gun of 5.5 calibre, 1 K. M. gun, 2 machine guns, 140 rifles."

In a message on Tuesday evening
General Maude reports: "After a night march we made a surprise attack on one division of the Thirteenth Turkish army corps on the west bank of the Shatt-el-Adh, about seven miles north of its junction with the Tigris.
The enemy was driven from his position and fell back on the Second Turkish division of the Thirteenth corps some ten miles further north. In this action 131 prisoners were taken, including four officers, many transport mules, ponies and camels."

TO BUILD WOODEN SHIPS.

Ottawa, Report.—The Imperial Manufactures Board and the United States Shipping Board have agreed to a consultation during the past fortnight with regard to co-operation in the production of wooden ships in Canada and the United States.
Standardized types of vessels have been agreed upon, and there will be no competitive bidding for contracts. Arrangements are now being made to have a complete list of the shipbuilding industry in Canada. It is P. R. B. Richardson, of the United States Shipping Board, who will be in charge of the business organization of the industry for the Imperial Manufactures Board.

MURDER CASE REOPENED.

New York, Report.—The new government of Russia is to be asked to try the Minister of Justice Shchegolev on a charge of having falsely prosecuted a Russian nobleman, Count Rylov, for participation in a ritual murder, according to a despatch to the New York Forward from the St. Petersburg correspondent. It will be told in the same count where the minister's trial took place, the despatch said, which at the time attracted attention throughout the world.

EXHAUSTED, THE ENEMY NOW QUIET

All His Furious Counters Failed to Gain Against British.

A FOOLISH CLAIM

Was That of Berlin, That Haig Was Trying to Break Through.

Paris Cable.—Vel hints as to a possible reinforcement of the armies here by additional veteran forces are being made.
(By Perry Robinson.)

British Headquarters in France, Cable.—Last 24 hours have been comparatively quiet, except for artillery and aerial activity. There was no infantry operations of importance. Renewed army counter-attacks on Gravelle attempted to develop, but were broken up at Gravelle.
Elsewhere, except for heavy shelling by long-range artillery, the enemy seems to have exhausted himself. We are busy consolidating the ground.

The comparatively narrow depth of our advance gives a misleading impression on the importance of the success on the 23rd and 24th. It is more valuable to put out of action 50,000 Germans and gain half a mile than to gain five miles and only inflict a loss of 10,000 on the Germans. They can better afford to give ground than men. What our army wants is fighting. The last few days the Germans undoubtedly fought in some cases with great determination. It is necessary to delay us, and they are willing to pay an enormous price in order to move back their guns.

AN ABSURD CLAIM.
The absurdity of the German wireless claims that the last operation was an attempt to break through is shown by the fact that the advance points at the west are still 6,000 yards from the Quentin line. How any commander could be expected to attempt to launch an attack on such a line when his men had 6,000 yards to go before reaching it is not easy to understand.

The recent operation was purely for the local purpose of gaining the objectives necessary for a methodical progress towards the Quentin line. The chief of those objectives were the villages of Gravelle and Gravelle.
Which we hold. North of the Scarpe we would gladly have gone further through the village of Rouex but the defence here are so prickly it would have cost too costly in men. There are also expensive ways of getting such positions by a little delay. That the enemy attached supreme importance to the places captured is shown by his desperate efforts to recover them, but which he has not been able to do. It is a great loss that we have in order to capture Rouex. Geographically the operation was small, but, interpreted in terms of the damage done to German power, its importance was immense.

THE OFFICIAL REPORTS.

The official communication issued this evening says:
"A part of the enemy which attempted to raid one of our crater posts southeast of Ypres early this morning was driven off with losses."

"There was considerable activity number of points between St. Quentin and Arras, and also in the neighborhood of Ypres."
"Successful work was carried out by our aeroplanes yesterday, in spite of the less favorable weather. In air fighting two German machines were brought down, one of them falling in our lines. A third was driven down out of control. Three of our machines are missing."

THE GERMAN VANDAL

Again Busy Destroying Rheims Cathedral.

Paris Cable.—Stung by the steady advance on the French front the Germans to-day threw fifteen large calibre shells at the Rheims Cathedral, damaging several important parts of its famous monument. Encouraged by their first success, sixteen more heavy shells were thrown upon the vaults and towers. The northern tower suffered most from the shelling, and is leaning so that its stability may give way at any time. S. A. P. G.
Saint-aullen, the architect of the cathedral, is seriously concerned as to the further resistance of the edifice to the heavy shells. The vaults and heavy projectiles.
The projectiles being used are of the 350-millimetre size. Some of these huge missiles crashed into the building during Sunday.

TURK WAS LATE

In Destroying British Water
Base in Sinai.

Constantinople Cable.—The War Office made the following announcement to-day:

"On the Sinai front our troops have defeated the enemy lines in the midst of the desert and totally destroyed the water supply system which the British had constructed for their troops.
Destruction of the water works built by the British to facilitate their advance across the desert into Palestine probably would not interfere seriously with the operations of the main British force. The British have now advanced to the neighborhood of Gaza, well on the ground into the desert, and have established a base on the coast."

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"I had been staying there for some time," he says, slowly and thoughtfully. "When an Englishman remains in one place on the continent—Italy especially for any length of time, all sorts of rumors are current amongst the inhabitants as to the reasons for his visit."

"Yes," she says again, listening attentively.

There may or may not have been some such rumors at Cassin, and you may have heard them."

He puts it as a question, but Laura Derwent, with her accompaniment of veiling her face, so to speak, does not show the slightest sign of comprehension.

"Yes," she goes on, calmly and quietly, "there have been some idle—quite idle—rumors at Cassin, and you may have heard them."

"It is just possible," she says, looking down, unable to bear the searching gaze of his dark eyes.

"Exactly," he says, "I see by your manner that you did hear them. Then I have a request to make to you. If you think—I do not, but you may— that you are, shall I say indebted to me in any way—"

"I am awfully indebted to you!" she murmurs.

"Then you can discharge that indebtedness by granting this request," he says, gravely.

"What is it?" she asks. "Whatever it may be, I will comply with it."

"It is this," he answers, "that you will say no word of what you have heard to Signa."

"To Signa?" she says.

"To Signa!" he repeats, quietly.

She is silent for a moment, then she looks up at him.

"Do you suppose it possible that I should mention any—"

"Scandal," he puts in for her.

"Yes, scandal, to her, your future wife?"

"No," he responds, with a grave smile. "It is not possible. I am fully answered. I thank you. Shall we dance now?"

CHAPTER XXIV.

"Quiet, my dear!" exclaims Lady Rookwell, with a grin. "What do you call quiet? I should consider this quiet enough even to satisfy you," and she shakes her head emphatically.

It is just three weeks after the ball at Northwell Grange—that ball about which the country is still talking, concerning which the society papers are still publishing paragraphs—and Lady Rookwell, Signa and Laura Derwent are seated in her ladyship's drawing-room.

Scattered about on tables and chairs is a miscellaneous collection of female attire, consisting of dresses for morning and evening wear, travelling costumes, ulsters, a tremendous assemblage of socks, muffs of sable, bonnets and hats, in quantities large enough, apparently, to set up a fashionable milliner's. Seated in the midst of this paraphernalia is Lady Rookwell, "fingering" a costly white satin costume, the lace and trimmings of which plainly denote the purpose for which it is intended to serve. Laura fits to and fro, turning over the mass with critical approval, and Signa stands leaning against the back of a chair, contemplating the disorder with rather a troubled smile, which, trouble as it is, does not detract from the happiness which glows on her beautiful face and shines in her dark, violet eyes.

"Quiet!" repeats Lady Rookwell. "I call it a remarkably quiet wedding."

"Oh!" interjects Signa.

"Considering all the circumstances," goes on her ladyship argumentatively, "you must remember who and what the gentleman is whom you have honored with your grace. He is—"

"Spare us! Let us off with any one-third of Lord Delamere's titles, and I exclaim Laura Derwent, with mock ecstasy.

"The Earl of Delamere, my dear, and though no doubt you would like to creep off to church arm in arm with him, and dressed in a brown lincey, it can't be. The world—society—demands something like decency from people of his standing, and really I think he has behaved wonderfully well in humoring your whims to the extent he has done."

"He is an angel!" declares Laura Derwent, taking up the assemblage and eyeing it with intense and speechless approval. "Simply an angel! I never met a man like him. He doesn't seem to possess even a temper. A child—if he cared for it could do anything with him."

Signa smiles.

And yet you could not persuade him to go to the Grange or to leave his lodgings at Mrs. Thompson's," she says, with pleasant malice.

Laura Derwent pouts.

"There he was obstinate, if you like. Of putting up with such an abode, and that, too, when his own place was ready for him! And to insist that I should remain as hostess at the Grange!" and she laughs. "Oh, yes, he is eccentric! But what a happy girl you will be! And as to a quiet wedding, why, I think it is very good of him not to insist upon a regular state affair; he is so proud of you that he might have made up his mind to a wedding at the Savoy, with half the house of peers in attendance."

Signa puts up her hands with a little gesture of mock alarm.

"And you said six bridesmaids and—"

"And all this," she says, nodding at the superb wedding garment which Lady Rookwell seems loath to put aside. "It seems to me a dreadful fuss and—and expense. You all forget that—that though Hector is an earl I am a mere nobody."

"So was the biggest girl when King Coptham married her," retorts Laura cheerfully; "but you may depend upon it that there was a tremendous wedding on that festive occasion. Now, my dear child, you have nothing to complain of; you have got the best man of the day—hon my word, I don't know better parli!—and everything your own way. Be content!" and she puts her arm around Signa and kisses her, holding her arms' length with affectionate admiration.

"The simple fact is that Signa is romantic," says Lady Rookwell, with a sarcastic smile. "And would like this affair to end consistently. It has been so deliciously romantic up to the present, that to conclude it properly she and Delamere ought to run away and get married on the sly."

"Lady Rookwell!" murmurs Signa, with smiling reproach.

Then she goes out on the velvety lawn, to wander about the garden where, none and undisturbed, she may dwell on her vast happiness. My Lord of Delamere has gone up to London to make preparations for his wedding, for even so eccentric a peer as Hector cannot be married by common law; and there are deeds to sign and execute, arrangements to be made with the steward and agents of the vast estate, who will be in charge during the absence of his lordship on his wedding tour, for, after that the happy pair shall make a little continental tour in their honeymoon, returning to the Grange at the end of the month, to take, as Lady Rookwell says, their proper position in "the county."

"Bring him back a different man, my dear," she says. "He has had quite enough wandering and gallivanting. Let him come and settle down, and breed prize short-horns, in noble emulation of his grace the duke."

Yes, Signa is very happy—happier than it falls to the lot of many mortals to be, and yet there is little, if any, gratification derived from the high estate to which she is about to be raised. It is love, love and nothing but love of which she thinks; and when the fact now and again flashes across her mind, that in a few days she will be the Countess of Delamere, and a power in the land, she strives to put it from her and forget it. But the world has a knack of declining to forget such things, and it insists upon keeping the fact green in Signa's memory. Not a day passes but parcels of presents arrive at the Rectory for Signa, the future mistress of Northwell Grange; the drawing-room table and her own little dressing table are covered with jewel-cases and the thousand and one useful and useless articles which our dear friends deem it necessary to offer up at the nuptial shrine.

Sometimes, as Signa opens the morocco-covered and satin-lined cases, and looks dreamily at their inclosed treasures, she cannot help thinking that it is a pity that Hector Warren, instead of my Lord of Delamere, whom she were going to marry, how few would such tributes mean. For instance, would her grace have sent her the present of antique Spanish lace, declared by Laura to be worth a Jew's ransom?—or the duke the little case containing a diamond bracelet and a brooch with a bull's head in center?—from the person there comes no present, but something that Signa values more highly, and that is a short note of good advice, and these were Signa's in the end, and it is true that Signa, when she read that note knew that the good mother was aware of that some of the lower and under-world of all, and there were tears in Signa's eyes as he put that small created piece of paper in some hidden receptacle.

Of Sir Frederic who had heard only too late that terrible, yet delightful night, excepting that he was abroad, no one knew exactly where. Notwithstanding the scene at the time, and these few awful moments of mental agony, Signa cannot find it in her heart to feel hatred toward him; no true woman, perhaps, can bring her love to hate the man who has loved her, however great the trouble up with her. And Signa thinks of him—alas! for poor Sir Frederic is but sorrow—more with a pitying sorrow than anger. Between her and Hector, however, there is no such feeling. She does not even know that the old tower has been razed to the ground by Lady Rookwell's orders.

"Of course, you can't be married from the Rectory, my dear," Lady Rookwell had said when Lord Delamere had said "that's impossible. In the first place, the Rectory wouldn't hold the guests; and in the next, the fuss and bustle would send your aunt into hysterics. The best thing you can do, my dear, is to come here; we shall not go into hysterics, and we shall enjoy the fuss and bustle; and as for Laura, it will simply be a god-send to her. She has been so mixed up with the affair, that she couldn't feel more interested if she were going to marry Delamere herself—which she would very much like to do!"

"Which she would," assented Laura, unblushingly.

"And will only be too delighted to be a prominent personage on the nuptial day."

And Signa, with many protests, had accepted gratefully and sweetly. It seemed to her as if the world were full of friends, and that she were the most favored of all favored mortals just at this time.

So the Beauty had the pleasure of assisting in the selection of the wedding and other dresses—indeed, of superintending for Signa showed what Laura called a shameful indifference in the matter—and made all arrangements for the wedding, and, of course, on the other hand, there were a great many people coming. It seemed to Signa as if half the county had been invited, and she once hinted, with a blush, that there would not be room in the church.

"—and Hector, with a man's sublime ignorance, 'you and I will keep outside and be married amongst the tombstones, Signa!'"

Laura Derwent was to be the chief bridesmaid—"mourner," as Lord Delamere put it—two of the ducal daughters were to be the second and third, and the rest were drawn from a collection of poor and needy kindfolk of Lord Delamere. Kinfolk whom he had rarely seen, but who had been constant recipients of his bounty and generosity, and who regarded him with an awe that half-amused Signa, whom they persisted in looking upon as one of the most unfortunate and beautiful creatures on the earth. The bridesmaids, with the exception of Laura Derwent, were put up in the ducal palace, while Signa fitted to and fro between the Rectory and the villa.

A great change had come over her aunt and uncle. She was now everything in their eyes. Nothing was too good for her; the rector almost fell on his knees for her, the rector almost fell on his knees for her when she entered the room, and hurried to the door to open it for her when she quitted an apartment, as if she were already the Countess of Delamere.

It is at all wonderful that Signa moved about during this time as if she were the phantom of a dream? At times seemed so unreal to her that at times she was inclined to believe that she was a person on the earth. The Rectory, as Signa had known it, no longer existed, and then he would come, still wearing his well-worn clothes and traveling hat, and as he held her in his arms the reality would come back to her, and she would understand that all this fuss, and show, and glory were nothing compared with his love. As to Signa, words cannot describe the exceeding joy of that young gentleman at the present state of things. That Hector Warren should be Lord Delamere does not at all surprise him, after the first natural shock; it is just as it should be, in Archie's estimation. Signa is fit to marry a prince, and Hector Warren is only fulfilling his duty in becoming an earl. With rank independence Archie calls the earl Hector, though the rector and his wife have tried hard to impress upon him the enormity of so doing.

"We always called him 'Hector,' and his name is one of his names is Hector, and why shouldn't I call him so still? He don't mind, do you, my lord?" And Master Archie dashes full pelt upon Lord Delamere's knee.

"Not a bit. I like it," is the reply.

"Let me be always Hector with my friends, and I am content; all the rest of the world can call me what they like."

To Archie's infinite delight, Lord Delamere has taken him to London— is it because his lordship may have some one near him to talk continually about Signa?—and Archie is near him now, ensconced in a grand London hotel, and enjoying himself to his heart's content.

A wonderful man, my dear," says Lady Rookwell, when she heard it; "there can't be much evil in a man when of his own free will he elects to have a young child with him as a companion." And Signa smiles with rapturous assent.

All this Signa thinks of as she saunters in the beautiful gardens of the villa and her heart is full of that peace which perfect happiness alone can bring. It is difficult to realize that in a few short hours she will be Hector Warren's wife, that is, the Countess of Delamere, and mistress of Northwell Grange, still the fact comes before her. The bans have been asked three times, and soon the irrevocable words will be spoken, and she will be no longer Signa Grenville, but my lady of Delamere!

CHAPTER XXV.

With a loud resonant peal the bells of Northwell ring out to the world the warning of another marriage morn. In and about the villa there is much bustle and confusion; carriages arrive in twos and threes, setting down the favored guests who are invited to the wedding breakfast. Another string of vehicles paces round the church, which is all alive and alight with a crowd of village sight-seers, dressed in the best, to see the grand wedding, a double row of little girls in muslin frocks, and bearing baskets of flowers, line the path to the church porch, eager for the moment when they are to fling the said flowers at the feet of the bride. The coachmen, as they drive up, smile significantly, and put their immense staid rosettes into place; footmen range themselves round the church yard rails and view the proceedings with haughty but bland interest. Inside the church itself the choir in clean surplices await the rector, who in a state of excitement and nervousness, coughs and rubs his chin and wipes the perspiration from his face in turns.

Meanwhile, up at the villa, Laura Derwent is in her element. Dressed, as are all the bridesmaids, in a costume of the faintest pink—a pink so faint as to be almost imperceptible—with a hat which has cost Madame Louise a world of anxiety, she moves about amongst the crowd of guests, with her brilliant smile and clear, bell-like voice in constant requisition.

"So glad it is a fine morning," she says to her grace, who has deemed it necessary to come in her most resplendent feathers, and who looks as if, barring the bonnet, she were going to court. "Happy the bride that is surrounded by such a crowd of guests! But it is a delightful day, though. What a crowd it will be! Poor Signa will be horrified! She has insisted on a quiet wedding. As if anyone who was any one could be married quietly. Well, your grace, I am glad to see you have come, we should have missed you terribly."

"Yes, I've come," says his grace, with a smile and a nod, "though, to tell you the truth, I ought to be at the farm; one of my bulls has gone mad or something like it. But I couldn't disappoint you, to say nothing of the bride. Where is she?"

And he looks around as if he expected to see Signa.

BRITAIN'S EFFORT
HISTORY'S MARVEL

One of the most eloquent tributes paid by a neutral writer to the part Great Britain is playing in the war is contained in a recent issue of the Boston News Bureau, which is reproduced in the Wall Street Journal. The writer says that all the wonders of the world, ancient or modern, fade when compared with what Britain is doing to arms where no arms existed has produced a bigger army than history ever before recorded, and a war machine in Europe that for wealth of shell, explosive and war power is the amazement of the Germans. Britain has in thirty months what Germany took thirty years to do, and she has done it more thoroughly and on a vaster scale. Without an English aeroplane engine capable of circling her own islands, she has vanquished the boasted Zeppelin and is the mistress of her own skies. With submarines she has mastered the ocean's coast defenses and her 'ood supply, she has swept all oceans, bottling the German fleet, with the exception of an odd raider like the Moewe and the vessel that is now preying upon merchantmen in the South Atlantic. She has made, the writer says, "the English Channel a multiple-track ocean railway to France, with no less by Zeppelin or submarine; fought in Africa, at the Canal, the Dardanelles, grappled with the Turk and the Bulgar; changed generals and admirals in command; changed Cabinets; fed the armies of France; maintained the armies and the Government of Belgium and Serbia. She altogether advanced three thousand millions of dollars, or three times the national debt of the United States, to her war allies."

This is admittedly some considerable achievement for the "ice-cold haterdashers of the Times." While the United States has been trying to find out how to make military rifles and quantities and has unfilled orders for them amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, England has been making rifles for the million for herself and her allies, cannon by the thousand, boots and coats by the million for herself and her allies, and what seems to the News Bureau writer most wonderful of all, she has done all this, in doing it, and is prepared to do on, acting it while her manufacturing, her trade relations and her overseas commerce remain unimpaired. She has grabbed, he says, the trade of the world, so that her enemies are struggling on half rations with food, rubber and metal supplies cut off from the outside world except as new territory is taken. This combination of war and trade achievement by Great Britain was never before dreamed of. Two years ago nobody imagined that the war cost to Great Britain would be more than five or six billions; today it is twice that amount, and Great Britain is preparing to double it again.

Each achievement seems to be the supreme marvel until the next one is achieved, but the greatest of all is Britain after all was in her national spirit. The British lion was regarded as a mere money-bag of trade and a wheel of the seas before the war began. The Prussians could calculate upon the wealth of Britain in gold, take toll of her goods and her machinery, and her wealth and her navy was considered of no account. There was no way by which they could calculate upon the soul of the nation. Speaking of that soul which has been waked by the war, the News Bureau says: "It is fighting under every man, the getting under every man, the honor from Washington only increase the resolve of her people and their faith in the invincibility of the righteous cause. For this they are willing to pledge everything in sacrifice for justice upon the altar of their battle field. To what martyred souls runs back this heritage of noble spirit only the historians of the future may attempt to answer." It is this spirit which is the deadliest enemy that Germany has to reckon with today.

But with the spirit and with the wealth that has staggered the world something yet remains, if an explanation of Britain's tremendous output of war munitions is to be given. Twenty-five years ago the machinery of England stamped out the coinage of many nations and made the cannons for many others. She was the ordnance maker of the world. Then Germany loomed as a local, and by means of Government bounties, cheap labor and English free trade she finally put many an English industry

Learn laughs delightedly. "I wonder, of course, she couldn't 'You didn't expect to see her on view before the ceremony, did you?"

"I didn't know," said the duke's household, "I forgot. I hope she's well. Most charming, really, and quite a novel quality in young ladies. Quite well, and looking more charming than ever, as you admit when you see her," says Laura, turning on to the next arrival.

In her ancient lace and heavy satin, which for this occasion only is purple instead of black, Lady Rookwell seats herself in her own chair, and presides with an intense enjoyment of the scene.

"I hope you'll all find room," she says, with a gesture of design that would be insolent from any one but herself. "Laura has asked just twice more than this twice into of a place will hold, and if there is any crowd, you must stand close by her, and her grace graciously replies that there will be plenty of room, she is sure, and that of course every one is anxious to see the wedding about which everybody is talking."

Upstairs in Lady Rookwell's own room she sits—or rather stands, surrounded by Lady Rookwell's and Laura Derwent's maids, arranging the coats and dresses and hats, half absent, to the hum and buzz of the crowd beneath.

out of business, and only in the manufacture of her great naval guns did England retain her old supremacy. But the foundations in metal works and the old factories in this business had not wholly disappeared when the war storm burst, and it was upon these almost forgotten foundations that British soldiery and British wealth reared anew her old metal industry and transformed them into munition plants. This is not, as the writer says, a fight between armies; it is a struggle between the old and the new, every man, woman and child is devoted to only one object, the winning of the war.

The writer calls attention to the fact that this is not only a struggle between the finance, the metal and the soldiers of two rival groups. It is also a struggle for economic existence in order that the fighting forces may be increased. Germany was the first of the belligerents to realize that war power might be increased by cutting out luxuries; but England has grasped the fact and she is prepared to go as far as Germany or even farther in denying herself anything whose consumption might delay the end of the war. The British people are organizing in clothing, food, drink, the discarding of unnecessary comforts, increase in the energies and hours of labor and the mutual dependence of all forms of production. And the nation will be better for it after the war. As Lloyd George said, when the fight is over, it will be easily dealt with by people who have learned the lessons that the English people are learning and who will not forget the lessons; yet the writer quoted says that while the world is coming into a new civilization, the people in the United States appear to have little comprehension of the fact that inevitably flow therefrom—Mall and Empire.

Corn Silage Compact.

Eight tons of corn silage can be stored in the same space as required by one ton of hay or straw. It is a valuable feed. One ton of alfalfa hay contains about 1,800 pounds dry matter or 1,000 pounds digestible nutrients. Eight tons of well matured corn silage contain about 4,200 pounds dry matter or 2,800 pounds digestible nutrients. Therefore the same space will store nearly three times as much digestible nutrients in the form of corn silage as in the form of alfalfa.

Tired Being Pleasant.

Virginia a debutante, came in from a month's visit to friends. Dropping into a chair she sighed in satisfaction and involuntarily exclaimed, "Oh, I am so glad to be at home."

Her sister looked up inquiringly.

"Did you have a good time, Gina?"

"A good time. Yes," she responded. "A glorious time, but I am so tired having to be pleasant!"—Judge.

NERVOUS DISEASES IN THE SPRING

CURED BY TONING THE BLOOD AND STRENGTHENING THE NERVES.

It is the opinion of the best medical authorities, after long observation, that nervous diseases are the common and more serious of the spring months than at any other time of the year. Vital changes in the system, after long trouble than the familiar spring morbid, or the nervousness, or the weakness and weariness from which most people suffer as the result of indoor life, in poorly ventilated and overheated buildings. Official records prove that in April and May nervous diseases are at their worst, and that then, more than any other time, a blood-making, nerve-restoring tonic is needed.

The antiquated custom of taking purgatives in the spring is useless, for the system really needs strength for the system really needs strength to enliven the bowels, leaving you weaker. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine for the system, and that feeds the starved nerves, and thus cures the spring troubles and other disorders. They cure also such other forms of spring troubles as headaches, poor appetite, weakness in the limbs, as well as remove unsightly pimples and eruptions. In fact they unfailingly bring new health and strength to weary and depressed men, women and children.

THE CRISIS

France, England and Italy in peace times did not depend upon America but on Russia, Roumania and Bulgaria for most of their breadstuffs. With these sources closed the crisis of the hour demands that we see that our soldiers and the Motherland are fed.

Everyone in Great Britain has been put on limited rations: meat is prohibited one day a week and the making of cakes and pastry has been stopped. Further restrictions are anticipated.

Bread has gone to 28c per four-pound loaf in England, for the first time since the Crimean War.

Lord Devonport, British Food Comptroller, proposes taking authority to search the houses of Great Britain to prevent food hoarding.

Forty million men, less the casualties, are now on active service.

Twenty million men and women are supporting them by service in other war activities.

In the last analysis, the land is bearing this burden.

One million tons of food-carrying ships have been torpedoed since February 1st, 1917.

Germany's hope for victory is in the starvation of Britain through the submarine.

Canada's sons will have died in vain if hunger compels the Motherland's surrender.

The land is waiting—the plough is ready—will we make the plough mightier than the sword?

Will we help the acres to save the flag?

World-Hunger Stares Us in the Face

David Lubin, representative of the United States to the International Institute of Agriculture—maintained by forty Governments—reports officially to Washington that the food grains of the world on March 31st, 1917, showed a shortage of 150,000,000 bushels below the amount necessary to feed the world until August, 1917. He declares it is beyond question that unless a greater acreage is put to crop in 1917 there will be WORLD-HUNGER before the 1918 crop is harvested.

The failure of the grain crop in the Argentine Republic, which is ordinarily a great grain-exporting nation, resulted in an embargo being placed, in March, 1917, upon the export of grains from that country to avert local famine.

The United States Department of Agriculture, in its official report, announces the condition of the fall wheat crop (which is two-thirds of their total wheat crop) on April 1st, 1917, to be the poorest ever recorded and predicts a yield of 244,000,000 bushels below the crop of 1915. The 1916 crop was poor. Even with favorable weather, the wheat crop of the United States is likely to be the smallest in thirty-five years, not more than 64% of the normal crop.

Under date of April 10th, Ogden Armour, executive head of Armour & Company, one of the world's largest dealers in food products, stated that unless the United States wishes to walk deliberately into a catastrophe, the best brains of the country, under Government supervision, must immediately devise means of increasing and conserving food supplies. Armour urged the cultivation of every available acre. The food shortage, he said, is world-wide. European production is cut in half. The Argentine Republic has suffered droughts. Canada and the United States must wake up!

Hunger

Grip
—New York

People are starving to-day in Belgium, in Serbia, in Poland, in Armenia, in many quarters of the globe. Famine conditions are becoming more wide-spread every day.

On these alarming food conditions becoming known, President Wilson immediately appointed a Food Comptroller for the United States. He selected Herbert C. Hoover, to whom the world is indebted as Chairman of the International Belgium Relief Commission for his personal direction of the distribution of food among the starving Belgians.

Mr. Hoover is already urging sacrifice and food restrictions, for, as he states, "The war will probably last another year and we shall have all we can do to supply the necessary food to carry our Allies through with their full fighting stamina."

The Problem for Ontario

The land under cultivation in Ontario in 1916 was 365,000 acres less than in 1915.

Consider how much LESS Ontario produced in 1916 than she raised in 1915:

	Year	Acres	Bushels	1916 DECREASE Acres	Bushels
Fall Wheat	1916	701,867	14,912,050	105,315	9,794,961
	1915	811,185	24,707,011
Barley and Oats	1916	529,886	12,388,969	24,432	7,504,160
	1915	554,318	19,893,129
Peas and Beans	1916	95,542	1,243,979	31,401	799,070
	1915	126,943	2,043,049
Corn	1916	258,332	12,717,072	51,441	9,043,424
	1915	309,773	21,760,496
Potatoes and Carrots	1916	139,523	7,406,129	34,411	5,858,594
	1915	173,934	13,264,723
Mangel-Wurzels and Turnips	1916	42,798	9,766,045	8,006	15,600,308
	1915	50,799	25,366,353

Other crops show as critical decline.

Reports from Ontario on the condition of fall wheat for 1917 are decidedly discouraging.

As there is an average of not more than one man on each hundred acres of farm land in Ontario, the prospects indicate even a still smaller acreage under cultivation in 1917 unless extra labor is supplied.

Food Production is the Greatest Problem the World Faces To-day

Cwing to destruction by submarines, ocean ships are scarce.

It is much easier to protect shipping between Canada and England than on the longer voyages from India or Australia.

One vessel can make twice as many trips from Canada to Britain as from India, and four times as many as from Australia.

Therefore, every ton of food stuffs grown in Canada is worth to the Motherland two tons grown in India or four tons grown in Australia.

Why the Call to Canada is So Urgent

If this country does not raise a big crop this year, not only will the people of Canada suffer but the Motherland and her Allies will suffer and their military power will be weakened if not paralyzed. Therefore, the right solution of the present war problem comes back to the farm, as to a foundation upon which our whole national and international structure must be built and maintained.

The Second-Line Trenches

—McKay in
The New York American.

The farmers know that they are the last reserve, and that the soil on which crops are grown is the strategic ground on which wars are decided. To their care is entrusted the base of supplies.

To enable the farm to do the work two factors are essential. The first is Time. Whatever we are to do must be done at once. Nature waits for no man. The second is Labor. Many farmers cannot plant the acres they would because they cannot get the necessary help. Many are afraid to increase their acreage because they fear they would not be able to cultivate and harvest an unusual crop after they have raised it. If they are to do the work that is essential for them to do, the last man in each city, town and village must be mobilized at once.

Every man not on Active Service can help. In every city, town and village are men who, by their training on the farm, or by their present occupation, can readily adapt themselves to farm work. These can render no greater service to the Empire at the present time than by answering the call of the farm. Capable men and boys willing to learn should not allow their lack of farm experience to stand in the way.

Can the employer render a more signal service in this crisis than by encouraging these men to help the farmer to cultivate every available acre, and by making it easy for them to go?

Ontario's farm lands are waiting—the implements are ready—the equipment is complete—the farmer is willing—all he needs is labor.

So short is the world's food supply that without increased production many in Canada must go hungry, and even with enormously increased production we cannot expect cheap food. The world is waiting for our harvest.

If peace should be declared within a year, the food conditions will be no better, for the accumulated hunger of the Central Empires must be met. This will absorb a large part of the world's supply.

We do not know when this war shall cease. It is endless—its lengthening out has paralyzed the thought and conception of all men who thought about it and its possible time of conclusion. Three months—six months, we said; nine months, a year, we said; and yet two years and eight months have passed their long dreary and sanguinary length and there is no man who can tell how long this gigantic struggle may yet last.

Lloyd George, in a letter addressed to farmers throughout the Empire, said:

"The line which the British Empire holds against the Germans is held by those who WORK 'ON THE LAND as well as by those who fight 'on land and sea. If it breaks at any point it 'breaks everywhere. In the face of the enemy the 'seamen of our Royal naval and mercantile marine 'and the soldiers gathered from every part of our 'Empire hold our line firstly. You workers on land 'must hold your part of our line as strongly. Every 'full day's labor you do helps to shorten the struggle and brings us nearer victory. Every idle day, 'all loitering, lengthens the struggle and makes defeat more possible. Therefore, in the nation's 'honour, heed! Acquit yourselves like men, and as 'workers on land do your duty with all your 'strength!'"

So, for the honor of Canada's soldiers in France—and for the glory of our New-born Nationhood—let it be said of Ontario's citizens that, in the hour of our greatest need, their response was worthy of their sons.

We owe a great debt to those who are fighting for us.

Summer Millinery of the most fashionable and authentic sort is a fitting description of the scores of New York Models which have just arrived from the world's Fashion Centre. Many striking changes are revealed in the style lines for Summer, one of the most noticeable features being large flat and drooping Sailors which are to be much worn. The collection embraces—Italian Milans, Leghorns, Lisere Sailors, Large Black Shapes and Black and White Hats, also many Sport Hats in the small droop effects that are trimmed or semi-trimmed, in fact most every shape, color and trimming that's "New" is here, and we urge your early inspection while the selection is complete.

Major Lowery was Wounded

Former Frankford Boy, now a Popular Western M.P.P., in late Casualty List

The following report of the wounding of Major J. R. Lowery, M.P.P. of Lloydminster, Alberta, we copy from the Calgary News-Telegram. Major Lowery is a son of Inspector Jno. Lowery, of Frankford, and has been in the West for some years where he has become well-known and very popular. His many old friends in this locality will hope for his speedy recovery. The News-Telegram says:

Again to-day there is a long list of casualties, but fortunately Calgarians and Albertans do not figure so conspicuously as they did yesterday. British Columbia and the battalions in the east appear to be suffering the most, according to today's list. Among them is Major J. R.
Lowery, Lloydminster, Alberta, who is listed as wounded. Major Lowery is known by many Calgarians and is also widely known throughout Alberta. He is not yet thirty years old, but he is one of the most prominent men in the province. Major Lowery can well be said to be a self-made man. He put himself through the Alberta University and got his degree. Then he rose into prominence quickly and was for several years a member of the legislative assembly in Edmonton for Lloydminster. He was one of the youngest members in the house. He was also the 'junior whip' for the Liberal party.

He enlisted in Col. Arnot's Battalion, the Southern Alberta, as it was called.
Here he showed an earnestness and seriousness that quickly won him promotion.—Ontario

HYMENEAL

BUSH—BURKITT

The home of Mr. and Mrs. George Burkitt, Sidney, was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday morning,
April 25th, when their second daughter,
Margaret, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Alexander Miller Bush, third son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bush, Sidney. The ceremony which took place in the spacious drawing room under a bridal arch was performed by the Rev. B. F. Byers, M.A. Rector of Trinity church, Frankford, in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends.

The bride who was handsomely gowned in white silk crepe de chine looked lovely as she entered the room at eleven o'clock on her father's arm. She wore a veil, also carried a beautiful bridal bouquet of carnations and snailax and was given away by her father. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Arthur Burkitt of Rawdon, sister-in-law of the bride. After the nuptial knot had been tied, the guests which numbered about 130 repaired to the dining room where a most substantial repast was daintily served.

The groom's gift to the bride was a gold wrist watch, to Mrs. Burkitt a crescent brooch set in pearls, to the ring bearers, little Miss Mabel Burkitt, niece of the bride and Master John Burkitt, brother of the bride, gold pins.

The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and useful presents, expressive of high esteem in which she is held. The happy couple motored to Trenton in the afternoon, where they took the train for Toronto and other western points, the bride travelling in a navy blue suit with hat to match.

The LEADER joins in congratulations with the numerous friends of the young couple and wishes them bon voyage through life.

On Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. William Bush gave a reception for Mr. and Mrs. Alex Bush upon their return from their honeymoon. About 60 guests were entertained and a most enjoyable evening spent.

Entered Into Rest

In Holloway, on Sunday, April 29th, Mrs. Cook, beloved wife of Falliam Cook aged 47 years, passed away. Mrs. Cook has been a sufferer for some months.
She bore her affliction with true christian patience and submission. She knew her end was approaching and hailed with pleasure the time she should depart to be with Jesus. She is survived by a loving husband and two sons, John and Leslie.

She is gone to her rest; but why should we mourn her?
She is gone to her rest in the mansion of love.
She is gone to her Saviour, and now waits to welcome.
Her friends to the home of the blessed above.

Her place here is vacant and never will be filled again.
Her voice will be heard never more by her friends.

May we follow her as she followed Jesus,
Until we all meet where time never ends.
She is gone to the rest prepared by the Saviour.

For those who are faithful to Him there below:
May her triumph incite us to use our endeavor
To work to lead others the Saviour to know.

She is gone to her rest, but we would not recall her,
Her conflicts and trials and troubles are done.
Her husband and friends may meet her in Heaven.
When they too, have all of life's victories won.

She is gone and we know not how soon
we must follow.
May our lives be composed of such actions of right.
That when the Lord's summons comes to us to meet Him,
We'll be ready to enter the mansions of light.

Potato Production

The average yield of potatoes per acre in Ontario in 1916 was 53 bushels. The next lowest yield in the last thirty-five years was 76 and the average annual yield for the whole period, 114 bushels per acre. Considering both yields and prices of seventeen different farm crops, those which gave the greatest returns per acre in Ontario in 1916 were as follows: Potatoes, $78; Turnips and Other Field Roots, $76; Beans, $63; Husking Corn, $39; and Fall Wheat, $33. It will be seen that the highest returns were obtained from the cultivated crops.

According to present prices, the food value of rice purchased for one dollar is equal to that of potatoes costing two dollars. Rice can be used as a vegetable to take the place of potatoes. Seed potatoes are exceedingly scarce and people throughout the Province are eating potatoes which should be retained for planting. Those farmers are wise who retained their potato crop for seed purposes even though they were criticized for not bringing them to market. I would suggest that those having seed potatoes for sale, beyond local requirements, advertise in local, agricultural or daily papers.

In normal years, it is economy to cut good sized potatoes in sets varying from one ounce to two ounces each. In the average of ten tests conducted at Guelph in five years the following average annual yields per acre were obtained from good sized potatoes cut into pieces of different weights as here indicated: two ounces, 150 bushels; one ounce, 130 bushels; one-half ounce, 109 bushels; one-quarter ounce, 88 bushels; one-eighth ounce, 79 bushels; and one-sixteenth ounce, 37 bushels.

Small potatoes are frequently produced from scraps or from diseased tubers. The potatoes produced in Ontario in 1916, however, were exceptionally free from rot and were unusually small owing to the growth being arrested by unfavourable weather conditions. Potatoes did not thoroughly mature last autumn and immature potatoes are inferior for table use but make excellent seed. At this particular time, therefore, potatoes, the size of hens, eggs or even smaller, might be used for seed to good advantage. These could be cut into pieces even as small as one-quarter ounce each and could be planted in rows twenty-eight inches apart with the pieces twelve to fifteen inches apart in the rows. They should be planted the same day that they are cut. Where good seed is unobtainable whole potatoes not more than one-quarter to one-half ounce in size might be planted with the prospect of receiving moderate returns. It would be an advantage to spread out the small potatoes in a warm light room for two or three weeks to allow them to sprout before planting.

The usual time for planting potatoes for best results is from the 15th to the 25th of May. Potatoes do well on sod land. If it is impossible to get the land ready before the time mentioned, the sod might be ploughed to a depth of about four inches and the potatoes planted every third furrow; after which the land could be rolled immediately and then harrowed to press the soil around the potatoes and to conserve moisture. According to present indications, the average of potatoes will be less than usual this year.

With the possibility of a famine in food materials, great care should be exercised by both the farmers and the city gardeners in growing the crops of highest value, in using the best seed obtainable and in economizing labour.

O. A. C. Guelph, C. A. Zavitz April 28th, 1917.

Dear Mrs. Coulter:
Very pleased to receive your parcel of socks this morning which was greatly welcomed by all the boys. I don't see how our people think so much of us boys and cannot express our thanks for your kindness to us. I gave out the socks to the boys who needed them most as we are all western boys and jolly good fellows. I am the only one now left in this Batt. who left from the home town since Sergt. Scott left us.

I think this is all I have to say at present only that they come in very useful for this part of France is cold and very wet. Thanking you all once again for your kindness and remembrance.

Please enclosed find slip of names who socks were distributed to: Stanley Wetherell, John Wilson, Jim Larkin, F. A. Weldon, J. S. Rushleigh, H. B. Jones, W. B. Thomson, Herb Bowen.

Dr. Blagrove of Belleville. The comedy drama, "Ten on Parle Francois," put on by the Belleville Dramatic Company, and the dramatic skit, "A Cheerful Companion" were well presented. The entertainment was under the auspices of the local patriotic committee. The music by the orchestra was very much enjoyed.

The public generally will be pleased to learn that Col. H. H. Alger, M. O., was present when Pte. Bert Conley was brought in from the battlefield with his many wounds. Although serious the Col says "not dangerous," but the very best aid and care that could be rendered, will beyond question be given. Bert was a popular boy here, and our sympathy goes out to his mother in her severe trial. We all look forward to Bert's home coming which may mean months. Col Alger is now in the Canadian Ambulance Corp, and the Canadians are day by day distinguishing themselves on the field of battle, it is not long till fighting will take place in the open, and if Fritz cannot get a separate peace with Russia, he will come to the conclusion that the song sung by the Canadians contains more truth than fiction.

GERMAN LINE WAS AGAIN SMASHED AT TWO POINTS

Renewed Drive by British Yesterday Rolled Up More of "Hindenburg's" Line.

Fierce Fighting All Day, the Foe Showing Much Better Spirit.

LONDON, Cable.—The official report from British headquarters in France to-night reads:

"Fierce fighting occurred throughout the day from west of Quent, to the village of Vimy, four miles east of the village of Vimy. The enemy again employed large reserves of men and guns, and delivered repeated counter-attacks, practically along the whole front. These hostile forces suffered heavily from our concentrated artillery and machine gun fire, both while assembling prior to the attack and during the actual assault. In the face of this stimate resistance, our troops this morning penetrated a sector of the Hindenburg line west of Quent, and have maintained themselves there all day against constant and powerful counter-attacks.

"Further progress also was made in the neighbourhood of Cherisy, astride the Arras-Cambrai bank of the Scarpe, where the positions, which changed hands frequently and were defended with great determination, are now in our possession.

"On the left of the battlefield we captured the village of Brochy, and the enemy's positions south and north of Fresnoy, on a front of two miles. We also gained a footing in the enemy's trench system north of Oppy. Progress was made at other points, and the fighting continues. In addition to the enemy's severe losses, killed and wounded, we captured several hundred of German prisoners."

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

British Headquarters in France, Cable.—After five days of calm fighting on a large scale was resumed along a wide front to-day, and more important strategic points fell into British hands, including the village of Fresnoy, several miles north of the Scarpe River, and the ground about Cherisy, some distance south of that somewhat insignificant stream.

Between Fontaine-Croisilles and Bullecourt about 60 yards more of the original Hindenburg line, which ran from Quent in a northwesterly direction towards Arras, was penetrated and rolled up. This fighting was close to the Quent trench system, extending north from there to Brochy. Work on this new system is proceeding with feverish haste, according to prisoners, and the stubborn resistance the Germans are now offering, is to prevent the necessity of their occupying the new line before it is ready for prolonged defensive action.

To-day's range of operations covered virtually eighteen miles, although the pressure was not exerted over this entire front. There was artillery activity at all points, however, and the stronger German positions were fairly deluged with shells.

BEGAN BEFORE DAWN.

The fighting began just before dawn, and continued throughout a day of glorious sunshine. The troops moving up in support of those actually in the firing line passed along roads whose overhanging trees were lapped with the first fresh green leaves of the renewed life of spring. The fields, bare and brown, were now yellow with cowslips and dandelions; birds were singing, joyous, full-throated melodies. A warm east wind stirred up great clouds of dust, and the men were white with fine chalk powder blown from the roads. As the marching columns reached the battle zone, however, all was changed. The trees became only gaunt, black skeletons; the once fair fields had been pitted and scarred and withered under the shell fire until the earth itself was killed by the poisonous blast, and no living thing could grow thereon even under this first warm impulse of the new season. The new melodies were the deep-throated roars of cannon, the whine of shells, the whistle of bullets.

Under the soft light of a May moon the British guns roared the artillery preparation at intervals during the night, but it was not until the lunar rays had disappeared behind the western horizon that the real bombardment began. In its intense form it was of short duration. Then the guns settled into barrage work as the trenches stole out from their forward trenches, or shallow shelters, hastily dug in the ground during the more recent advances.

It was still half an hour before dawn, and the morning mists gave a deeper density to the darkness.

STIFF FIGHTING FROM THE FIRST. There was stiff fighting from the very first, and everywhere along the line the Germans offered desperate resistance. Since the battle of Arras began on Easter Monday the Germans have concentrated great numbers of guns opposite the British, and lately they have been firing with almost reckless extravagance. Much of the shooting has been absolutely blind, since the British took all the high ridges, the Germans being unable to get more than momentary observation with aeroplanes and balloons.

This morning the British creeping barrage fire, which swept like a great trellis work of exploding shells in front of the attacking troops, was met by a furious defensive curtain of fire, and for half an hour or more the artillery display was one of the most wonderful seen during the war. At the north of the line the Canadian troops, who occupied Arras several days ago, pushed forward and took Fresnoy.

A German officer asserted that the morale of the troops opposite the British front was better than during the battle of the Somme. He said that the German soldiers now see their aeroplanes about. They also seem to be getting more and more lively support during the last three weeks. There had been much complaint about the lack of this support, and the infantrymen had begun to regard themselves merely as targets for the British artillery. The officer declared that the feeling was all changed now and that the Germans believe their artillery equal to any.

Oddly enough, German shells began to pelt about the prisoners' collecting station with deafening reports, so characteristic of the German high explosives, and the Germans had to be moved to a safer spot.

AUSTRALIANS PARTICIPATE.

Good progress was made east of Guemappe, along the Arras-Cambrai road, and British troops, pushing through Cherisy, south of that road, swept several hundred yards beyond their first objectives. There was heavy fighting about Fontaine-Croisilles and Bullecourt, in which the Australians took part. There was also more fighting about Oppy, to which the Germans are still clinging.

The wood west of this village is very dense, and is fairly bristling with machine guns, some of which have been mounted in the trees. This wood also is one continuous tangle of barbed wire stretched from tree to tree. The Germans are holding desperately to two woods west of Monchy-lez-Pessieux, known as the Bois du Sart and Bois du Vert, and have connected the two with elaborate trenches.

Heavy counter-attacks were attempted time and time again during the day, and from every section of the battlefield come echoes of the never-ceasing artillery duel.

CONSPICUOUS GAINS.

LONDON, May 3.—Fighting of terrible intensity raged throughout the day at the main points of the British attack, says Reuters' correspondent at British headquarters. "The battling," he adds, "has been in many places of ding-dong order, which renders it extremely difficult to define the situation, but I think it may certainly be claimed as a successful day for our gallant troops. The most conspicuous gains have been on the flanks of the long front, while towards the centre, up to the valley of the Scarpe, we have made less progress owing to the intensity of concealed machine gun fire.

"Despite the opposition of massed German forces, the Canadian troops took Fresnoy, Oppy, however, still proved too strongly held to attempt to carry it by direct attack without incurring a heavier casualty list than the enterprise warranted. The wood in front of the ruined village literally was infested with machine guns.

"The Germans are fighting with desperate obstinacy.

"Machine guns were perched in trees at various heights, while lines of uncut wire were discovered in gulleys which concealed them from direct observation as well as from the searching effect of this place without counting a heavier casualty list than the enterprise warranted. The wood in front of the ruined village literally was infested with machine guns.

"The Germans are fighting with desperate obstinacy. Several new divisions have been identified at different parts of the front, showing the Germans continue to use their strategic reserves. Counter-attacks, usually on a formidable scale, developed promptly opposite every point where we gained ground. The enemy recaptured some ground at Guemappe, but the counter-attacks generally were broken up by our artillery fire, which was maintained with almost incredible intensity."

frequently through the front section area until we saw evidence of the presence of the enemy. The men and women of the 1st Canadian Trench Battalion, who were in the front line, were in a state of high alert. A torpedo was seen moving toward the ship on the port side. The lookout by the gun of the ship reported to the captain. The great ship swung round quickly. In another two seconds she would have escaped, but a landing sound told that the torpedo had struck the ship. She began to settle rapidly. A few soldiers saw they saw a periscope 600 yards away.

With exemplary coolness every man took his place, and in four minutes everything was ready for the attack. The ship. The soldiers sang, and the parade was chiefly notable for their absolute calmness and cheerfulness. All were in high spirits. The ship seemed to be sinking fast. The colonel said to the bridge, "You may smoke on this night, boys; keep steady." The men replied: "It's all right, sir; we're all right."

The commander gave the order to abandon the ship. Nine boats were lowered in perfect order. While the men were embarking in the boats they continued to show cheerful spirits. One of the officers told his command, "You may smoke on this night, boys; keep steady." The men replied: "It's all right, sir; we're all right."

A few minutes later the engineer reported that the ship was able to go ahead, the damage to the propeller having been repaired. The boats were recalled, and the men went on board again. Then the colonel called for volunteers for the attack. Hundreds responded, and 40 were selected, but were unable to go, as the water gained rapidly, and the ship was sinking steadily, the engine room being at ready flood. Three destroyers and two trawlers came up to the top speed, and all of the boats and some of the crew were transhipped in a few minutes after 4 o'clock.

During the whole critical time the only nurses on board, Sisters Tatlow, of Victoria, and Lord, of Tasmania, who were great favorites with the crew, had been considered as going, going from company to company helping the men fasten their lifebelts. The three chaplains also rendered aid. Great cheers were given when the patrol vessels moved away after the Ballarat troops had been landed late at night.

CONFISCATE ENTIRE CROP

Germany So Notifies the Farming Community.

Only One-Quarter to Be Left for Them.

AMSTERDAM, Cable.—The whole of Germany's coming year harvest will be requisitioned by the Government, according to Dr. George Heim, Bavarian member of the Centre party in the Reichstag. In a speech at Neustadt Dr. Heim warned the farmers to be prepared for new and heavier restrictions. He said that from the moment of the first ripening of the entire crop would be confiscated, and that only one-quarter to one-third of the crop would be left for the farmers. Everything would be organized on military lines.

The farmers, according to Dr. Heim, are to receive the maximum price in addition to a bonus for early threshing. This measure, he said, was absolutely necessary in order to ensure the period of transition to the new harvest.

Dr. Heim then proceeded to condemn the Imperial Chancellor's economic policy as having failed to show sufficient foresight, and was therefore responsible for existing conditions.

WHOLESALE FRAUD.

Conspiracy Alleged to Have Wrecked Insurance Co.

PITTSBURGH, Report.—Representative of the Attorney-General and constables from an alderman's office continued their search to-day for the seven men who were yesterday accused by J. Denny, a well-known insurance commissioner, of conspiring to defraud the Pittsburgh Life Insurance Company out of $1,000,000. None of the men could be located in Pittsburgh, and it was said the search would be transferred to New York, where most of the reside. The men for whom warrants were obtained are: Clarence F. Birdseye, New York; Kollogg Birdseye, New York; Geo. Kollogg Birdseye, New York; Robert R. Moore, president of the Commercial Trust Company of New York; and W. C. McQuinn and a Mr. Watson, whose addresses were not given.

It was intimated that additional warrants were to be sworn out, and that other men would be involved in the prosecution.

Discussing the condition of the company, Mr. O'Neill said his examination led him to believe that the company's assets were in a state of collapse. The had been entirely wiped out. Through the operations of Clarence F. Birdseye, a promoter of New York, he said, $1,000,000 in actual cash had been secured from the company in the days of its collapse, according to the commissioner, $1,000,000 went to finance the Dore Lumber Company in North Carolina; $500,000 went to pay certain alleged "dummy directors"; another $500,000 went to promoters; and $100,000 was dissipated in generous payments to men little known in the deal.

The company was capitalized at $1,000,000, and its assets amounted to $24,000,000. It had a defective outstanding insurance of about $115,000,000.

FRESNOY-EN-ARTOIS WAS CAPTURED BY CANADIANS

Our Infantry Reached the Foe Dugouts Before They Could Emerge.

Hundreds Forced to Surrender—Prisoners Amazed at Their Work.

LONDON, Cable.—The British attack was on a front of 12 miles in the region from east of Vimy southwards to the west of Quent. West of Quent and near Cherisy salients were driven into the German line, and the village of Fresnoy and enemy positions north and south of the village on a front of two miles and a trench system north of Oppy were captured and held by the British.

The Germans suffered severe losses in the attacks all along the line, and also lost hundreds of men made prisoner by the British.

(By Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Correspondent With the Canadian Forces.)

Canadian Army Headquarters, Cable.—Shortly before dawn this (Thursday) morning a Canadian column, composed of veteran troops, carried the fortified village of Fresnoy-en-Artois by storm.

Stories of prisoners and of our own wounded as to what occurred in Fresnoy, and the trenches which were taken, agree that the enemy, who, as at Arras, had taken over the defense only a few hours before the assault, had largely sought shelter from the fearful shell-fire to which he was subjected by descending into deep dugouts and to the cellars of houses. Our infantry followed closely behind the bursting shells and reached the enemy's dugouts before he could emerge. For the occupants of the dugouts that meant a death by the bombing of the dugout. Some of the Germans holding the trench to the north of Fresnoy did emerge from their dugouts to begin to fight. They were quickly dispersed by the Canadians, after passing over the wire and trench system, had potted men between the front line trench and the enemy's supports, and cut the German on the front line off from all chance to secure help. The men thus cut off were from the British division. Practically an entire company of them surrendered under these circumstances, through officers with them, but while the greater part of the prisoners were taken in this way, others surrendered only when they could no longer carry a rifle or operate a machine gun. A captured enemy officer said there was not time to bring a machine gun of his company into action before the men were overwhelmed.

The capture of Fresnoy carried the Canadians almost a mile further than before on the way to Douai, which is only a little more than eight miles due east from the further point of today's advance.

Since April 9 the line has been pushed eastward from Neuville St. Vaast, the jumping-off place of the Canadian army corps a distance of almost six miles, under most adverse weather conditions during the greater part of the time. Now that nature smiles the rate of progress is expected to be more rapid.

WIRE ENTANGLEMENTS 30 FEET WIDE.

Fresnoy lay within the main Mercurio-Guy position, which, throughout its length, was strongly protected by wire entanglements 30 feet wide. For some days our artillery has been working overtime destroying this wire along a frontage of over two miles north and south of Fresnoy, as miles north and south of the village. The ground has been searched by artillery fire for machine gun emplacements, which, when well concealed behind uncut wire, give a tremendous advantage to the defense.

Much ammunition was thus expended, but the free use saved the lives of many of our brave fellows to-day in the tangle of houses, or rather ruins of houses, through which they fought their way down to the eastern slope of the new line established. Many of the enemy's dugouts were buried in the ruins of the houses destroyed in the last terrific burst of fire which preceded the assault.

Prisoners taken already number 10 officers and 200 of other ranks. What Vimy ridge and Arras began, the Fresnoy completed. The line has been taught that it is a very dangerous thing to despise men who go to winning a battle as if it were their job.

FOUGHT BITTERLY.

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

British Headquarters in France, Cable.—Arras and Fresnoy had been swathed about with great defensive works and numerous lines of barbed wire. The Fresnoy garrison fought with great bitterness, and it was not until the Canadians had practically surrounded the village that the survivors, cut off with, surrendered. The number of prisoners taken here was 200 men and seven officers. One of the officers spoke excellent English, and as a Canadian officer was contacted by the British he was asked to see the positions from which the Germans were driven during the storming of Vimy ridge on April 9. He marvelled at the situation, and asked Canadian division took the particular position he saw. When told it was the same division which captured him at Fresnoy to-day, he laughed, and said he could not believe it. He could not believe that his division in the Vimy first would be able to go on now, and choke his head incredulous ly when told that all the divisions were still at their battle strength. The British at Arras, every man was all Frenchmen. Two front regiments had come into the Fresnoy trenches last night for a great German counter-attack as Arras this morning. Needless to say, their plans were a bit upset by the British attack.

TURKS WANT PEACE

Without Conquest, and So Notify U. S. President.

AMSTERDAM, Cable.—A Vienna despatch quotes Talaat Bey, Turkish Prime Minister, as saying to a reporter for the Neue Presse that Turkey did not seek conquest, but an honorable peace, and had so informed President Wilson. The Turkish premier is quoted as saying:

"Turkey went into the war for the defense of the country, and not with schemes of conquest. We wish an honorable peace, always have wished it, and so informed President Wilson. Our enemies refused the invitation, but as soon as they change their minds we are ready to negotiate an honorable peace."

Talaat Bey said that he regarded the Russian revolution as a development favorable to Turkey, as czarism aimed at her destruction.

FOE NAVY GUNS FACE CANUCKS

Enemy Brings Heavy Weapons to Slop Advance.

German Raid Beaten Off by Our Troops.

(By Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Correspondent With the Canadian Forces.)

Canadian Headquarters in France, Cable.—The enemy is now thoroughly alarmed over our latest thrust from Vimy Ridge, and he has increased his artillery fire on this part of the front. He is expending projectiles more freely now than at any time since our advance began. Among the new guns he has brought up is a long one of 14 inches calibre, probably originally meant for battle crusers of the Hindenburg class. Shells fired from it appear to be of fairly recent make, although others of smaller calibre that were used a short time ago were arm-piercing, which would indicate a scarcity of ordinary high explosive ammunition.

This morning aeroplanes on our corps front temporarily blinded the enemy by destroying four of his observation balloons, while maintaining vigilance against enemy planes.

Enemy patrols in the region between Arras and Fresnoy are very nervous and call for aid from their artillery at the slightest sign of abnormal activity on our front. They are clearly apprehensive of an attack on Fresnoy.

The Germans attempted to raid our lines last night, but failed to reach them. Some casualties were inflicted by us.

FEWER CATTLE IN ONTARIO

Live Stock Men Meet Resources Committee.

Great Chance for Married Labor On Farms.

TORONTO, Report.—The Organization of Resources Committee at their meeting yesterday had a conference with representative livestock men, including John Gaudin, president of the Ontario Cattle Breeders' Association; J. C. Stuart, Ontario president of the Ontario Sheep Breeders' Association; Wm. A. Dyer, president of the Ontario Swine Breeders' Association; and J. C. Stuart, Ontario president of the Ontario Poultry Association; and J. C. Stuart, Ontario president of the Ontario Poultry Association.

It was pointed out that the number of cattle has been decreasing steadily due to the increase in the cost of feed and the high prices being paid for beef and pork.

Many farmers are now realizing the need of keeping their suitable hoffer calves for milking and breeding purposes.

Emphasis was laid upon the great need for farm labor—there are many opportunities on the Ontario farms. Farmers are offering $450 to $600 per year, including a house and a plot of ground.

Permanent labor is in demand, and the farmers are disposed to accept inexperienced, but willing help.

The Special Poultry Committee have undertaken to increase the number of chickens that will be raised, particularly in the urban sections. They will hold meetings throughout the province in conjunction with the 60 local Ontario poultry associations, and hope to secure the hearty cooperation of all the members of these local associations.

$1,000,000 AID

By Munitions Board to Explosives Concern.

NEW YORK, Report.—Former Governor William C. Clegg, at Ottawa and former Federal Judge Clegg, at Ottawa, have been authorized by the Munitions Board of Great Britain for the sale to the latter of smokeless powder at 67 cents a pound an increase of seven cents a pound over the price previously agreed upon between the board and the Acta Chemical Company, Limited, a Canadian subsidiary of the Acta Chemical Company.

Not only did the Munitions Board consent to the increased price, but it also agreed to advance $1,000,000 as additional working capital to the Canadian company. The receivers explained that under this arrangement the Canadian branch would be able to repay some of its large obligations to the Acta Chemical Company.

ONTARIAN KILLED.

Mystery as to Dentist's Death in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Report.—A coroner's jury has been unable to decide yet whether Dr. Lewis T. Fisher, 28 years old, a dentist, at 1039 North Clark street, killed himself or was murdered. Dr. Fisher was found dead in his bedroom at 1,517 North Clark street on Monday morning with a bullet wound in his head. The body was discovered by Mrs. Ethel Burt, his housekeeper. Dr. Fisher's death was postponed until May 14 to permit the police to investigate. Mrs. Burt is in custody. Testimony at the inquest was of a nature which tended to support the theory that Dr. Fisher killed himself.

Dr. Fisher, a brother of the dentist, charged that Mrs. Burt had threatened to kill his brother. Mrs. Burt stated that Fisher stood in front of a mirror and fired three shots, two of which missed.

The body was sent to Alliston, Ont., for burial. Relatives of the deceased live in Barrie, Ont.

RUSS PLANES BUSY.

Heavily Bomb a Town On the Danube.

PETROGRAD, Cable.—The Russian official report says:

"On the Black Sea one of our bydroplane squadrons threw 120 bombs on Masmudia, on the Danube. Great destruction was observed. Notwithstanding the enemy's heavy shrapnel fire all our machines returned unscathed."

"Yesterday we brought down a German airplane in eastern Galicia. The machine and its occupants were captured."

"On the Caucasian front weak efforts of the Turks to advance in the region southwest of Gumishkhan were defeated easily by us. In the direction of Khanikin our detachments occupied an island in the Dnial River near Djumar, north of Khanikin."

FRENCH FLIES IN GOOD RAIDS

Enemy Barracks Fired, Stations, Factories Bombed.

Nineteen German Planes Were Wrecked.

PARIS, Cable.—The official communication issued by the War Office Thursday night reads:

"Quite spirited artillery actions have occurred in several sectors of the Alsace front. The Germans violently bombarded Rheims to-day. In the neighborhood of Braye-La-Roche one of our reconnoitering parties in the course of a raid on the German lines brought back about forty prisoners."

"In Champagne the artillery fighting was intermittent, there was no infantry action."

"On May 2 our pursuit aeroplanes displayed marked activity in numerous combats over the front. One of our fighters shot down a German observation balloon. The latter was damaged and fell in a damaged condition with its line."

"In the night of April 29-30 one of our Escadrilles bombed the railway station and factories at Thionville. On the morning of May 1, our aeroplanes dropped 220 kilos of projectiles on the aviation camp at Sissonville, on the following night the same camp was bombarded with 2,000 kilos of explosives. A great fire was observed in the barracks. One of our escadrilles bombed the railway stations at Reims, Fontenay-le-Comte, and Chatelet, a very violent fire, accompanied by several explosions breaking out."

Rawdon Circuit Notes

The quarterly communion service last Sunday was very largely attended. A reception service was also held.

The pastor and a large number of people attended the memorial service for R. Hinchcliffe at St. Andrew's Church, Rawdon, in the afternoon.

Sixteen members attended the Quarterly Board Monday night. There is a gratifying increase in membership, a deepened spirit of devotion, and a healthy advance in connexional funds, the general Missionary fund reaching $475, an increase of $125.

After a lengthy and frank discussion, participated in by every member present, it was unanimously decided to support the movement for a tent meeting at Oak Lake, provided co-operation endorses same. Mr. W. W. Dracup will represent the circuit at annual district meeting.

The pastor feelingly thanked the Board for their Christian kindness during his illness last winter, rejoiced in his restoration to health and cordially accepted the invitation to return next year, subject to approval of conference.

Public services next Lord's Day, May 13th, Mr. Pleasant 10:30; Wellman's 2:30; Bethel 7:30.

Letter of Condolence

18. 4. 17
Mrs. ALBERTA HUME, Stirling, Ont.

Dear Mrs. Hume:—It is with the very deepest sympathy that I have to convey to you the sad news of the death of your husband, who belonged to my Company. I am sure it will be a consolation to you to know that he died a gallant death, as a true soldier in the Great Cause. He was acting as a stretcher-bearer during the battle of the 9th, and it was while in the execution of this duty that he was hit. His comrades and I deeply mourn his loss, for we all fully realized his worth.

Please allow me to again convey my very deepest sympathy for you in the loss of your brave husband, who died while aiding our wounded men.

Yours truly,

H. Meredith Logan, Major.

Letter to Mrs. Agnes Conley

No. 8 Red Cross Hospital, A.P.O. N.I.I.
B.E.F., April, 21st, 1917.

To Mrs. G. Conley:—

I am writing on behalf of your son, Pte. Conley who was admitted here suffering from a wound and broken thigh bone (lower bone of the leg). He is fairly comfortable and not allowed to suffer pain. The surgeon considers his condition serious, but so far not dangerous, so I hope with skill and attention we shall be able to save his leg. He is in a bright ward, of a hospital on the sea front, far away from the lines where he can have almost anything he wants.

I will write again, only if there is anything fresh to tell you. We are very busy these days.

Believe me, Yours Truly,

T. ASHLIN THOMAS, Matron.

Man Deflects Bullet Shot at Sixty Feet

In the presence of army officers, chiefs of ordinance representing the United States Government, representatives of steel mills and the United States Rubber Company, a test was made of a bullet-proof armor jacket and helmet, the invention of Dr. Guy this Brewster and Emil Heller, both of Dover, N. J. The test was made by shooting at Dr. Brewster, who wore the armor, at a distance of sixty feet, with a regulation army Springfield rifle, loaded with regulation ammunition which carried a bullet at a velocity of 2,740 feet per second and has at sixty feet an impact equivalent to 2,400 pounds. The shot was fired by Sgt. Geo. Christwell, Company C, Fifth Regiment of New Jersey sharpshooters. The test was a remarkable success, the bullet being deflected from the armor without the slightest injury to the wearer. The bullet failed to even make an indentation in the plate. After the shooting, the doctor, while wearing the armor, gave a demonstration of the ease to which the protector may be put while engaged in battle. Also the resistance it afforded was shown when struck a hard blow with a ten pound sledge hammer in the hands of a husky man.

CROP TO PLANT LATER

Provide for Winter as Well as Immediate Needs.

CABBAGE AND OTHER THINGS

Good Food Products Can Be Secured by the Amateur by a Little Labor and a Small Expenditure.

(By S. C. JOHNSON, Vegetable Specialist, Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Besides growing many vegetables for immediate use the backyard garden should produce some vegetables which can be stored for consumption during winter months. Some, of course, do not need to be planted as early as the plants which were described last week. Possibly a week should elapse from the time the lettuce is planted before these should be sown.

BEETS, CARROTS, PARSNIPS, AND SALSIFY. These include the most important members of the root vegetables. They are usually grown for winter purposes, though beets and carrots are relished by many in their earlier stages of growth. All these demand practically the same attention. "The seeds should be sown in straight rows at a depth of about three-quarters of an inch. When the plants have reached a height of two inches they should be carefully thinned and spaced, the stand, beets and parsnips three to four inches apart, carrots and salsify two or three inches apart. It will be found that the parsnips are very slow growers, and for this reason it is sometimes advisable to plant a few seeds of lettuce with the parsnip seeds so that they will serve as a marker. The young beet plants may be used as spring greens. It is necessary that the soil be cultivated at intervals during the summer months so that the crops may grow. They do not as a general rule require as heavy watering as some of the other vegetable crops. In the fall the beets should be pulled up and the tops twisted off close to the head, not cut off with a knife as in the case of carrots, parsnips, or salsify, which should have the tops cut about one-half inch from the roots preparatory to storing for winter use.

CORN. In planting corn holes about two or three inches deep should be made with a hoe. Five or six kernels of corn should be dropped in this and covered with soil, which should be gently firmed by tramping on it. When the shoots are about three inches high all excepting the three sturdiest should be pulled out. The soil should be drawn up around the stalks as they grow, to give them support. When the kernels on the cob appear full of milk they are ready to use. It is also a good practice to cultivate the soil often around the corn, for expert growers claim that the crops corn and cabbage faster and better when plenty of cultivation is given.

CABBAGE. Cabbage is one of the most widely grown vegetables. The cabbage plant requires a supply of moisture, and yet if the cabbage soil is too wet the plant will be injured. Cabbage does particularly well on new land, and some growers claim that the cabbage grows without an abundant supply of manure in the soil better than many other vegetables. It is considered a good practice for backyard gardeners to purchase plants which have been grown in hot-beds or hot-houses and transplant them directly into the permanent bed. This saves considerable trouble. It is necessary when setting cabbage plants to set them fairly deep so that they will not be whipped about by the wind. They must be eight to ten inches apart, and there should be quite a good deal of soil around the roots. When they are ready to be set out a hole may be made with a dibber or a sharpened stick. The roots may be watered after they have been set. One of the most important features of growing cabbage consists in the attention given to cultivation of the soil. There may be some occasions when the head will split, this may be stopped or prevented if the head is taken in the hands and turned forcibly from one side to another.

CALLIFLOWER. The calliflower is treated in the same way as cabbage, the plants being grown and set out in the same manner outside. They are treated practically the same as cabbage until it is noticed that a little white flower has commenced to grow. The dry leaves of the plant should be brought together at the top and tied with a piece of string so that these little white flowers are protected from the rays of the sun and the rain. All calliflower heads should be treated in this manner when they are about two inches in diameter.

BRUSSELS SPROUTS. Brussels sprouts are perhaps the most hardy of the cabbage family. If it is impossible to secure brussels sprouts plants a few seeds may be planted about May 15 at a depth of one or two inches. They should be transplanted to the permanent bed about the 15th of June. They should be set eighteen inches in the row and two feet between the rows. It is well to keep the patch clean, and the surface soil should be stirred frequently. It is unnecessary to trim off the leaves as the plants grow in the garden.

SWISS CHARD. Swiss chard can be grown easily from seed, in rows twelve inches apart, the young plants being thinned to six or eight inches apart. The advantage of this plant is that the leaves may be pulled off close to the root and new leaves shoot up, which may be consumed during the season. The roots are used for greens and the stem of the leaf as asparagus. A few plants should be sufficient for a small family.

HONORED IN DEATH

Funeral Service of the late Senator Corby, one of the Largest Ever Seen in Belleville

The obsequies of the late Senator Henry Corby which took place on Saturday afternoon last in Belleville were most impressive and the public of Belleville and the surrounding district paid a noble tribute to the memory of the departed. It was the largest funeral Belleville has witnessed for years. The members of the Masonic Order under whose auspices the funeral rites were held and a very large number of citizens of all walks of life attended the service at St. Thomas' Church, took part in the funeral cortege or lined the streets by thousands. The popularity of the deceased, former parliamentarian and senator was never more clearly shown.

At the family residence, Ven-Arch-deacon Beamish, rector of St. Thomas, conducted a short service. The remains were then removed to the hearse and the cortege started for St. Thomas' Church. The interior of the sacred edifice was so crowded that with the exception of the members of the Masonic Order, the mourners and bearers, no one could gain admission. Before the cortege reached the church, Prof. W. Ernest Wheatley, Mus. Bac. A.R.C.O. played funeral marches. As the casket entered the church, borne by six members of the Belleville Fire Department as assistant bearers, a largely augmented choir and the congregation began singing "For all the Saints Who From Their Labors Rest" as the procession moved forward. Following the choir came the clergy, Rev. C. Winter, Shannonville; Rev. Canon Armstrong, Trenton; Venerable Archdeacon Beamish; Rev. Dr. R. C. Blagrove as bearers of the Bishop's staff and Rt. Rev. Dr. E. J. Bidwell, Bishop of the diocese of Ontario. The casket laden with flowers was placed in front of the chancel and the order of the burial of the dead began. Ven. Archdeacon Beamish took the opening service after which the choir and congregation chanted the impressive Ninetieth Psalm "Lord Thou Hast Been Our Refuge." Canon Armstrong read the scripture lesson 1 Cor. 15, 20. After the singing of the hymn "On the Resurrection Morning," Bishop Bidwell ascended the pulpit and delivered an address to the congregation. He chose as his text Psalm 90, 12 "So teach us to remember our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

In this beautiful poem, which forms a part of the burial service of the Anglican church, the Psalmist speaks in imagery of the uncertainty of life. He compares man to the grass in the morning which flourisheth and groweth up and in the evening is cut down and dried up. He tells that the days of men are three score years and ten, and though man may live to be fourscore yet he is soon gone. But the Psalmist has told us who is our strength and our stay, "Lord Thou Hast Been Our Refuge." He prays that God may teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. However short this life is, every day of it should be lived in the sight of God for it is His gift. The cure of our passing hours is not to gain earthly wisdom, a name written on history's page, nor fame which delights men's souls, but the wisdom which comes from the knowledge and service of God. We are on earth to acquire that heavenly wisdom by loving service by devotion to duty, by stern discipline which teaches man to sacrifice himself for others. These are the only things a man can take with him when he goes into the presence of God.

The Bishop knew the senator mainly by reputation as one of the leading church men in this diocese. "We are not here to talk of his wealth and power. We are here to speak of those qualities which death cannot rob him of. The key note of his life was service, not a cold bare service without touching the heart, but loving sympathetic service.

As the congregation reverently stood the organist played "The Dead March in Saul" Archdeacon Beamish and Bishop Bidwell officiated in the latter part of the service. After the singing of the "Nunc Dimittis," the recessional "How Bright Those Angel Spirits Shine" was sung and the casket was removed from the church to the hearse.

The organ music for the service included Chopin's Funeral March, Beethoven's Funeral March and Guilman's Lamentation.

The funeral cortege was that of an uncrowned king. From Church St. to Front Street thousands stood while the funeral coach went by followed by a carriage full of flowers. The interment was in the Corby family plot. Archdeacon Beamish took the service of the church while the Masonic ritual for the burial of the dead was read by R. W. Bro. H. J. Clarke and R. W. Bro. W. N. Ponton.

Death of Mrs. Spry

On Thursday, May 3rd, Mrs. Harriet Maria Spry, wife of Richard Spry, sr., passed away at her home just south of the village. She had been confined to her home for a considerable time and for many months was a great sufferer. She was born in Rawdon township and was in her seventy-fifth year. Her maiden name was Neel.

The late Mrs. Spry was very highly esteemed by a large circle of relatives and friends. She was a member of Memora Methodist church.

Besides her aged husband she is survived by a family of four sons and five daughters, as follows: John, of Newbury, Meck; Isaac and Richard, of Cordova Mines; Bradford, on the old homestead in Rawdon; Mrs. Ricketts, of North Bay; Mrs. Wm. Wright, Mrs. Jas. Reid and Mrs. Thos. Willman, of Marmora, and Mrs. Greenly, of Gilmour. Another son, Herbert, of Madoc township, died suddenly a couple of months ago. The funeral took place last Sunday, service being conducted in Marmora Methodist church by Rev. W. P. Woodger, after which the remains were interred in Mont Nebo cemetery, near Spring Brook.—Marmora Herald.

Husbands Cannot Vote

A large number of married men who in former elections have enjoyed the right of voting on money by-laws on their wives' property will not be able to do so in future. In the new rolls prepared this year the names of such persons have been struck off as owners and, only appear as tenants. Unless the wife gives her husband permission in writing to vote for her on all her property she holds in the town, he will have no say.

The rolls this year should also contain a column showing whether the assessed person is British-born or alien.

ANTICIPATIONS OF PURE GLYCERIN.

This Queer Substance is Endowed With Peculiar Properties.

One of the great advantages of glycerin in its chemical employment is the fact that it neither freezes nor evaporates under any ordinary temperature.

No perceptible loss by evaporation was detected at a temperature less than 2,000 degrees F., but if heated intensely it decomposed with a smell that few perhaps find themselves able to endure. It burns with a pale flame, similar to that of alcohol, and is heated to about 300 degrees and then ignited.

Its non-evaporative qualities make the compound of much use as a vehicle for holding pigments and colors, as in stamping and typewriter ribbons, carbon papers, and the like.

If the pure glycerin be exposed for a long time to a freezing temperature it crystallizes with the appearance of hard candy, but these crystals begin to melt at a temperature of 32 degrees, and melted it is almost an impossibility to get them again into the condition in which it was.

If a little water be added to the glycerin no crystallization will take place, though under a sufficient degree of cold the water will separate and form crystals, while the glycerin will remain in its natural state of fluidity, and suddenly subjected to intense cold, the glycerin will form a gummy mass which cannot be entirely hardened or crystallized.

Altogether it is quite a peculiar substance.

Big Telephone Pole.

The highest telephone or telegraph pole the world has recently been installed at the city of Washington. The old pole at this point was 100 feet high, and the new one is 130 feet high, a single pole of Oregon fir. It took a crew of 15 men and a day and a half to get it. It is further secured by a double set of guys and braces, running from the half way to the top to nearly

By Special Delivery.

The burglar had just begun his term and was assigned to work in the broom factory. Near him was an oldish man who studied him intently and seemed to be awaiting an opportunity to say something. It was while the overseer was at the lee latrine that he whispered, "How long are you in for?" he whispered.

"Twelve years," replied the newcomer.

The veteran looked around nervously and thrust a letter in the burglar's hand.

"I'm in for life," he said, "Mail this when you get out."

Try It and See

According to an eminent French scientist, flies show a marked aversion to things that are blue. This fact was first discovered by a French farmer, who kept a number of cows distributed in several sheds. The interior of one of these sheds had, purely by accident, been painted blue. The other stables had white interiors. The farmer soon noticed that while the cows in the sheds with white walls were driven almost to the point of frenzy by the flies, the cattle housed in the shed with the blue interior were not bothered. The little pests hovered outside this shed; only a stray one, whose sense of colour was perhaps not strongly developed, every now and again would be tempted to enter.

The farmer told of his observation, and soon other farmers took to painting their sheds blue with graining resins. Now it is a general custom among the cattle owners in France to tint the interior of their sheds with a solution made by mixing 10 pounds of slacked lime with 20 gal. of water and then adding one pound of ultramarine. The sheds are tinted with this solution twice during the summer, with the result that the cattle are pretty generally free from annoyance. It might be a good plan for owners of horses and cattle in this country to experiment with the use of blue about their stables and outbuildings. Nothing should be neglected which might add to the comfort of dumb beasts during the hot summer months. Dumb Animals.

Cobourg Will Farm: Let The Streets Go

Men and Boys of the Town Will Use Town Teams and Produce Food

The Corporation of Cobourg will farm this summer. The town teams will do the ploughing on some five or more acres of glebe and other untitled land, the town will furnish the seed, and the town men, as far as possible, will assist in planting this land with potatoes. The help of some of the Collegiate Institute boys, who have volunteered, may also be utilized. About thirty of the boys from the Cobourg Collegiate Institute are going out on farms; the others will help production in the town. Citizens are asked not to grumble if streets are not kept quite so spick and span in Cobourg this season, as the production of food-stuffs is the really important thing.

Order Your Empire Mechanical Milker EARLY—DON'T EXPERIMENT Buy the Safe, Satisfactory, and Simple Milker

Over eighty outfits now milking in your own county by your friends.

"Fanchar Farm Moxie" —OWNED BY— A. T. FANCHAR of Salamanca, has been officially tested three times—at the age of 2 years she made a record of 21 lbs.—at the age of 3 years she increased her record to 32½ and at the age of 4 years made the world's record for her age, of 46.84 lbs.

This record breaking heifer has been milked ever since she started to give milk the first time with an "Empire" and with each test she has bettered her previous record, which proves conclusively that the most valuable cows can be and are being milked with an Empire machine.

G. A. Brethen, Norwood, officially tested a three-year-old that milked 103.3 milk per day, 33 lbs. butter 7 days. This is another Canadian Record for age. Mr. Brethen is greatly enthused over the testing with his Empire Milker.

Mrs. DAVID WELLMAN, Belleville, Ont.

Dear Sister:—
I received your letter and passed a few days ago. I was sure glad to get it, because I have had since I left Canada it sure was a fine drink for me and some more of the boys.

Well sister how is Dave and the children. I hope they are all well as these few lines leaves me all O. K. It is very wet and quite cold over here, just about now, but it will not last long. I almost believe I will be home for next winter. I am living in hopes anyhow. Now sister answer me as soon as possible, you know it is nice to get a letter from home. I do hear from Flossie and Myrtle once and a while. I had a letter from Harry the other day, so I will have to answer it right away. Have you seen father lately? I hope he is well and in the pink of health.

Well Jennie I would like to be home for a few days and have a ride in your new car. I am sure it is much pleasanter than the horses. Well I have no questions to ask so I guess I will close for this time, answer soon. Good-bye and good luck to you all.

One might safely judge from the speed by which some motorists turn the street corners that the man behind the wheel is not fully conversant with the regulations respecting pedestrians. It would be well to remember that the man on foot has a legal right to stop every motor car that is coming towards him at an intersection of two streets until he has passed in safety.

The Parish Church of St. Thomas was filled to its extreme capacity, at the 11 o'clock service Sunday morning when the colors of the 155th Batt., C. E. Mrs. (Dr.) Meiklejohn, a former resident of Stirling died in Winnipeg on May 12th. For some time she had been in poor health, but was improving and her death was very sudden. When canvassing for Salt Denial contributions one day this week in the neighborhood between Chapman and Stead, Lieut. Graves, leader of the S. A. in town, accompanied by two other ladies were somewhat startled to see a bear some distance ahead of them on the main road. Needless to say the ladies did not care for any nearer acquaintance with his bearship and kept at a safe distance until he disappeared in the woods. It is not an uncommon thing for bears to be seen in that vicinity but this is the first to be brought to our notice for several years.—Tweed Advocate.

The idea of taxing of house cats seems never to have occurred to local ministers of finance and makers of revenue, yet the dog has long been a subject for municipal revenue. There are many people who would vote that the cat is a legitimate subject of taxation. In addition to the uncharitable animosities they are capable of when "civilized" animals are asked to plant in gardens. Also they are purveyors of disease germs. Just at present New York State is in the midst of a campaign against felines. In Syracuse alone over 1000 cats were destroyed in two weeks. The infantile paralytic epidemic is believed to be transmitted by the house cat.

LIEUT. COL. H. H. ALGER M. O.
Now with the 13th Field Ambulance
B. E. F. France, Canadians.

The following extract from a letter to Mrs. Alger from Col. Alger M. O. is of special value to our readers.

France, 417

No one seems to know the exact date. This is no longer the ordinary civil life we have lived in. After leaving the C. C. S. I came back to the 13th Field Ambulance and was soon started up the line till I came at last to the Advance Dressing Station. All wounded from the front come through this, the connecting link with the battalions again.

P. I shall soon go to the Battalion again, I expect, as I am next in line for that work. That will be the last move forward, I can do, as you know then the Reg. M. O. is the trenches. I will then have made a steady trip from first to last, viz—organization in Canada, to the front Trenches. Some experience. After all what is life.

I got my first souvenir last Sunday morning at 1.10 a. m. when a piece of high explosive shell came through my tent and hit the frame of my cot just under my waist. I picked it up and got my fingers hurt for my trouble. I got up dressed and started for a dug out, and by this time they were shelling the Ambulance Hospital. As I left my tent a shell also killed 2 tents in front of me seriously wounding 3 Stretcher Bearers blowing me off my feet but not injuring me. That was my first experience and a conclusive proof to all of us that no Red Cross or Hospital are anything is respected by the dirty Hun.

If I can dodge the shells and gas, the rest of it I will not mind. We are living in a dug out 110 feet long and 30 feet under ground, built and used by Fritz for a dressing station. We can see from our door a long view of the German front line and at night with the flares and signals it is some sight. This awful country is a picture of desolation. I could pick up a wagon load of souvenirs if I could only send them out to you.

May 20th. Pastor preaches and it is expected Mr. W. W. Drapeau will give a brief account of District meeting. Held 10.30, Mt. Pleasant 2.30, Well-mane 7.30.

OBITUARY

On Friday, May 11th, 1917, the remains of Samuel William Gordon Nerrie, of Bell View, were interred in the Twelfth line Cemetery. The service was conducted by Rev. S. E. Morton and St. Mark's Church was filled to overflowing.

Sam was very popular in this community and his sudden death was a great shock to everyone.

In October 1915 he enlisted with the 8th Battalion for overseas service but met with an accident while drilling which rendered him unfit for service and he was honorably discharged.

He was a member of the Anglican Church and one of the oldest members of the organized boys' class, "The Argonauts" of St. Mark's Sunday School. He was not only a member but a worker and giver as well. He will be especially missed in the work of Sunday School entertainments where he has for years most cheerfully given his time and talent.

He leaves a mother and sister, Mrs. J. F. Beswick, his mother who resides at Bell View, and his sister, Mrs. Harry Boyav of Frankford, whose husband is now somewhere in France. They have our heartfelt sympathy.

WOUNDED IN ACTION

Aeroplanes Landed in Sidney

The three biplanes from Deseronto which visited Belleville on Thursday last alighted in the fields belonging to Lt-Col W. N. Ponton. The landing was looked upon as quite an event. When the machines each carrying an officer and an observer came near, the cattle in the pastures and horses at work were greatly alarmed and ran about in wild confusion, but no accident occurred. Every poultry yard on the west side of Belleville was thrown into a clatter by the aerial visitors. After the machines landed, numbers of citizens arrived in automobiles and children from the Ontario School for the Deaf, ran to the scene. Members of Col. Ponton's family welcomed the aeronauts and invited them to return, which they are likely to do in the course of a day or so. After a short stay the visitors took flight in their graceful machines—Ontario.

Potato Planting

Select good heavy loam, clover and is best. Begin ploughing and drop potatoes every third furrow, one piece every 10 inches apart or two every 14 inches, then drag with light harrow until smooth. Begin cultivating when potatoes are up and keep at it so as to hold moisture in the ground, for a dry season stick an onion in each hill it will cause the potatoes to grow and create moisture. Care should be taken not to use too strong onions as they will cause the eyes to water so much the potatoes cannot see to grow. You will have no trouble with bugs if care is taken to catch and kill each one before they can lay their eggs.

Ship Building in Canada

The principal ship to be made out in British Columbia. The organization which is to take charge there has left Ottawa after conferring with the munition board. Preliminary arrangements have been made to build wooden ships to the full capacity of present yards, while new yards are in contemplation. By an arrangement with the United States authorities the same type of vessels will be constructed in both countries on a standard plan.

Busy Times On The Great Lakes

Navigation on the Great Lakes is now open, and the familiar sound of steam boat whistles is indeed a welcome one to many, for not only do the steamers afford relief from the freight congestion but also furnish a most comfortable mode of travel for passengers. Officials of the C & B Lines which operate the Great Ship "SEANDBEE" and Steamers "CITY OF BUFFALO" and "CITY OF ERIE" daily between Cleveland and Buffalo, predict that this season will surpass all others in volume of passenger and freight traffic. Never has business started with such a rush which surely reflects the general prosperous condition of the country. Vacation trips which afford change from the every day scene are regarded as essential by the American people, and thousands are now turning to the Great Lakes for the alluring trips bywater.

PORTO RICAN BATS.

Only Mammal On the Island Swarms in Caves.

The American Museum of Natural History has received a fine series of birds and mammals collected by H. B. Anthony, of the museum staff, in Porto Rico. Mr. Anthony conducted this expedition as part of a plan of a natural history survey of the island undertaken by the New York Academy of Sciences and the American Museum of Natural History in co-operation with the insular government.

Included in the collections are a number of specimens of bats and some mammals. It is not generally known that bats are the only mammals found on the island to-day. Not less than twelve distinct species were found in a collection of nearly 600 specimens. Caves are found all over the island and nearly fifty were visited. Many of these caves are extensive, and contain underground streams, so that exploration is a difficult procedure. In some places bats were found by the thousand, and when disturbed, the noise of their wings was like that of a gale of wind.

Although the layman regards a bat as a commonplace sort of animal, closer acquaintance yields many interesting facts about them and in the variety of forms obtained on the island, many important scientific points concerning them were noted. Most of the bats are insectivorous and play an important part in the control of insect life. The largest bats on the island are reputed to be fish-eaters. On this point, however, no first-hand evidence could be secured. The guano in many of the caves is a valuable asset as a fertilizer and the deposits are being worked by the natives.

In addition to the bats fossil mammals of a type hitherto unknown were secured. These mammals were, like the bats, to be found in the caves, but it was necessary to search for the latter by digging in the loose soil of the cave floors. Without doubt these animals lived before human habitation, but it is possible that some of them—larger rodents—formed an important item in the diet of the early Indian dwellers who used to visit the caves probably to celebrate religious ceremonies, at which time the animals may have been eaten and the bones cast aside. Evidence of this was found by examination of a number of refuse heaps in the caves in which horse and broken bits of Indian pottery were found.

The fact that Porto Rico at one time doubtless had an abundant point in the study of the history of the West Indies.—New York "Evening Post."

A ROUMANIAN VILLAGE.

Quaint Switch Houses Mask Great Poverty.

Behind the community haystack will be found the village.

Each village house itself seems but a mass of willow switches, wattled together, the interstices being then chinked in and about with mud, so that the place resembles nothing so much as the Dahomey villages of World's Fair times. Along the road, beneath the locusts, rise high walls of it, hiding the yards behind as Turkish women were wont to screen their faces from the masculine gaze. From the street wall other fences run back to the meadows, to enclose a yard.

Passing through the fence, one will see the home, usually the bare brown mud walls alone, but occasionally coated over with a whitewash of slightly blue tinge, and now and then boasting a portico, on which repose old sheepskin coats, green poppers, cats and the great troop of village dogs, the newcomers of the highway.

Inside the house, poverty is everywhere manifest. The floors are of earth, on which the family go about barefoot in order to save the costly shoes. The oven is of earth, the bed is a plank, set against the wall, and the table is supplied by a single cheap iron. Opulent peasants now go as far as to cover their walls with a cheap cloth, which gives a decidedly pretty effect, but they are the exception. For food on their table, there is one dish that is common to all, and that is a soft meal of maize. In addition, there will be mungoes, the poor man's friend, the Bulgians, either stuffed with cabbage, roasted or boiled, and, possibly, a potato. Sheep's cheese is also served; but bread is a rarity, and then it is of the black variety always. Meat, of course, is to be had on great occasions only.

At one end of the village stands the symbol of their wrongs, the home of the landed proprietor, to whom the adjoining thousand-odd hectares of land belong. Seldom, if ever, is the noble here. He lives in Vienna or Paris, and leaves the place in charge of some Greek or Macedonian, who has the stewardship for a term of five years, with the intent of making all he can, first for himself and then for the proprietor.—Christian Herald.

Grapes and Wine.

Most people think white grapes make white wine and dark grapes make red wine. It is a popular error. Red wine is made by fermenting grape juice and grape skins together, and white wine is made by fermenting grape juice alone.

THE NOISELESS MOOSE.

Taller Than Ordinary Horse, He Moves Silently Through Forest.

Although taller than an ordinary horse, weighing more than half a ton, and adorned with white spots, the bull moose stalks with ghostly silence through thicket forests, where man can hear him without being betrayed by the loud cracking of dry twigs. In summer it loves to lounge in shallow lakes and sluggish wades up to its neck in a lake to feed on succulent water plants, and when reaching to the bottom becomes entirely submerged. These visits to the water are sometimes without any purpose, at night, especially during the season when the calves are young and the horns at the bull's head are partly grown. Late in the fall, with full-grown antlers, the bulls wander through the forest looking for their mates, at times uttering far-reaching calls of defiance to all comers, and occasionally charging the hunters against the saplings in exuberance of manly vigor. Other bulls at season buy out the challenge and meet the rival for a little royal. At this season the call of the cow moose also comes, and the nearest bull quickly to her side. Hunters take advantage of this, and by imitating the call through a birch-bark trumpet bring the most aggressive bulls to their doom.—Exchange.

"SHORT SELLING."

How Money is Made as Well as Lost On Falling Market.

Someone writing to the New York World confesses that he shares Count von Bernstorff's declared ignorance of the workings of the stock market machinery "by which it is possible to make money on a falling market," and ask whether it is possible to make money "otherwise than by buying at low prices and holding the goods until the market rises again."

The World did not take the trouble to enlighten the inquirer. Yet it is worth while to do that. The speculative process that is known as "selling short" is a mystery to many, and frequently attempts to explain it to those who do not understand are unsatisfactory in their results, if not altogether futile.

It is axiomatic that profit can be made only by selling a third for more than one pays for it. The simplest process to accomplish the desired result is to do the buying when prices are lower than they are likely to be at some future time, and then wait until realization of the expected advance makes opportunity to sell at a higher price.

Short selling is simply a reversal of that process. The selling is done at a time when prices are higher than they are likely to be at a future time, and the buying when prices have declined. Manifestly, the difference is the same as it is in profit, just the same as it is when the buying precedes the selling. It is the fact that as a rule, short sellers do not possess what they sell, that makes comprehension of the process difficult to many. They cannot understand how anyone can sell something that he hasn't. But the explanation of that is simple enough. The short seller borrows the stock which he sells, directly he is a member of the stock exchange, or through a broker if he is an outside operator, and delivers the borrowed stock to the buyer. The lender of the stock is secured by the delivery, to him, of the purchase price, and the obligation of the seller to make up to him any advance in the price which may come before return of the stock.

When, sooner or later, the price of the stock declines, the sellers and borrower buys the stock as he has sold and borrowed for delivery at the lower price. He returns this to the lender and receives his original selling price. His gain is the excess of that over the price which he paid in a lower market.

This closing of the transaction is called covering.

We have described a successful transaction. It may happen, of course, that the short seller is disappointed in his expectation that he will be able to buy the stock which he sold when he didn't have it, at a lower price. It may advance so much that he is unable, or deems it advisable, to hold the transaction open indefinitely, for possible improvement in his favor. Then he must buy the stock for return to the lender, at a price higher than that which he paid for it, and the difference between selling price and the purchasing price is a loss to him, just as that difference is a loss to the speculator who buys when he believes a stock will advance sooner or later and in the end declines and he is forced, or thinks it advisable, to sell at the lower price.—Albany Journal.

MONEY IS USELESS.

No Cash is Needed in the Island of Ascension.

The Island of Ascension, in the Atlantic, belonging to Great Britain, is of volcanic formation, eight miles by six in size, and has a population of about 450. It was uninhabited until the confinement of Napoleon at St. Helena. Vast numbers of turtles are found on its shores and it serves as a depot and watering place for ships.

Ascension is governed by a captain appointed by the British Admiralty. There is no private property in land, no rents, no taxes and no use for money. The flocks and herds are public property and the meat is issued as rations. So are the vegetables grown on the farms. When an island fisherman makes a catch he brings it to the guardroom, where it is issued by the sergeant-major. Practically the entire population are sailors, and they work at one of the common trades. The muleteer is a jack tar, so is the gardener, so is the shepherd, the stockmen, the grocers, masons, carpenters and plumbers. Even the island trapper who gets reward for the tails of rats, is a sailor.

The climate is almost perfect; any thing can be grown.—Philadelphia Ledger.

INSECT TRAVELERS.

Moths, Butterflies and Beetles Make Long Distance Journeys.

Mr. William Evans, a Scottish naturalist, who has made a lifelong study of the fauna of Scotland, obtained from a dozen Scottish lightkeepers 341 species of insects, which include two butterflies, 169 moths, eleven caddisflies and lacewings, forty diptera, ten beetles and a dozen other insects. To reach the lake of May, in the fifth or sixth month of the year, Mr. Evans collected most of the insects, many of the species may have flown across several miles of sea.

In his records Mr. Evans calls attention to several other extraordinary flights of insects. Thus, the "painted lady," or tawny butterfly (Pyrausta nautica), or tawny butterfly to cross the Alps, the red admiral butterfly (Vanessa atalanta) has landed in numbers on the deck of a vessel 500 miles from the coast of England; the common white butterfly (Pieris rapae) has been collected in Canada; the monarch butterfly (Danaus archippus) abundant everywhere in the United States, is said to make the 2,000 mile journey from California to the Hawaiian Islands and has been collected by way of the south sea islands as far as Australia.

A death's head moth has boarded a steamer 200 miles off the Cape Verde Islands, and a ladybird, miles in extent, so that they resembled smoke from a steamer, have been seen at sea. A swarm of locusts that passed over the Red Sea in 1889 is said to have extended over 2,000 square miles and was estimated to weigh 42,850,000,000 tons!

ST. VITUS DANCE

EVEN THE MOST SEVERE CASES CAN BE CURED BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

Is your child fidgety, restless, or irritable? Is he the shifty, shaky, or the arm's jerky? Does the face twitch? Do the legs tremble or drag? These are signs of St. Vitus Dance, a nervous disease which is confined chiefly to young children, but which often attacks highly strung women, and sometimes men. St. Vitus Dance is caused by disordered nerves, due to poor blood, and is always cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills which fill the veins with new, rich red blood, strengthening the nerves and thus drawing out the disease. Here is proof: Mrs. John A. Cumming, Lower Caledonia, N. S. says: "When my daughter Myrtle was about nine years of age she became afflicted with St. Vitus Dance. The trouble was extremely bad, so bad that she could not hold anything in her hands, and had to be fed like a child. She could not even walk across the floor without help. She was treated for some time by a physician, but did not show any improvement. One day a neighborly lady had read of a case of St. Vitus Dance cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and we decided to give 'the medicine' a trial. By the time the third box was used there was some improvement in her condition, and we continued giving her the pills for about a month longer when she was entirely cured, and has not since and the least return of the trouble."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can be obtained from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE JAGUAR.

Is Bigger But Not So Fierce as African Leopard.

The Jaguar or "el tigre," as it is generally known throughout Spanish America, is the largest and handsomest of American cats. Its size and deep yellow color, prouly marked with black spots and rosettes, gives it a close resemblance to the African leopard. It is, however, a heavier and more powerful animal. In parts of the dense tropical forest of South America coal-black jaguars occur, and while representing merely a color phase, they are supposed to be much fiercer than the ordinary animal. Although so large and powerful, the Jaguar has none of the truculent ferocity of the African leopard. During the years I spent in this country, mainly in the open, I made careful inquiry without hearing of a single case where one had attacked human beings.

In one locality on the Pacific coast of Guerrero I found that the harder natives had an interesting method of hunting the "tigre" during the mating period. At such times the male has the habit of leaving its lair near the head of a small canyon in the foothills early in the evening and following down the canyon for some distance, at intervals uttering a subdued roar. On moonlight nights at this time the hunter places an expert native with a short wooden trumpet near the mouth of the canyon to imitate the "tigre's" call as soon as it is heard and to repeat the cry at proper intervals. After placing the caller, the hunter ascends the canyon several hundred yards, and, gun in hand, awaits the approach of the animal. The natives have many amusing tales of the success of this method. Their eyes are not more nearly at the apex of the head than they are not only forward, but backward for a short distance. Man, on the contrary, sees clearly only the object at which he looks directly. — Popular Science Monthly.

Why We Can Gauge Distance.

Aside from the monkey, man is the only animal having what we call binocular single vision. That is, he can tell not only the distance of an object, but the direction of it accurately in distance. This is because both of his eyes point at the same object at the same time. Like two range finders. Other animals do not concentrate their vision in this way. Their eyes are set more nearly at the sides of the head so that they see not only forward, but backward for a short distance. Man, on the contrary, sees clearly only the object at which he looks directly. — Popular Science Monthly.

FAMILIAR PHRASES.

A Few of the Many Gems We Get From Alexander Pope.

With the exception of Shakespeare, Pope is the author of more familiar phrases than any other writer of modern times. Here are a few of his gems:

"Shoot folly as you flies." "Hope springs eternal in the human breast." "Man never is, but always to be blessed." "Whatever is, is right." "The proper study of mankind is man." "Grows with his growth and strengthens with his strength." "Order is heaven's first law." "Worth makes the man and want of it the fellow." "Honor and shame from no condition rise; at well your part—there all the honor lies." "An honest man's the noblest work of God." "Thou wert my guide, philosopher and friend." "Woman at best a contradiction still." "Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined." "Who shall decide when doctors disagree?" "A little learning is a dangerous thing." "To err is human; to forgive divine." "Beauty draws us with a single hair." "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." "Damn with faint praise." "The many headed monster."

SEPARATE SKIRTS

Ultra Smart for Spring—Some Chic Blouses.

The separate skirt for spring has been given more attention by designers than this important garment has received heretofore. They have at last realized that it is just as staple a garment as the suit and frock, and are, consequently, taking quite as much care in its designing.

As a result, it is now being developed in various very appropriate fabrics and it is showing a greater variety of line. The barrel skirt is being featured this year, however, and one may safely say that it is the leading skirt silhouette. Sport skirts will be more popular than ever. There is, too, a dress skirt, much favored by fashionable Parisian women throughout the winter, which will be worn this spring. It is of black or navy blue satin and is especially effective when worn with the new chiffon blouses in art colors.

A very new design for a separate skirt is that which has been borrowed from the native dress of the French colony of Algeria. It has panels of thick pleats set close together to form the sides of the skirt, the front and back panels being entirely plain. Blouses, simple or elaborate, are frequently composed of two materials, usually sheer. Practically all dressy blouses are made up in sheer fabrics.

Minard's Liniment Co., Limited.

Gentlemen—Ever since coming home from the Boer war I have been bothered with running fever sores on my legs. I tried many salves and liniments; also doctored continuously for the blood, but got no permanent relief till last winter, when my mother got me to try MINARD'S LINIMENT. The effect of which was almost magical. Two bottles completely cured me, and I have worked every working day since.

Yours gratefully, JOHN WALSH.

When Parasols Began.

Parasols when they first came into use must have been cumbersome. Henri Estienne, writing in 1578, speaks of a parasol as capable generally of sheltering four persons from the sun. And when they diminished in circumference the material still remained of the heaviest. Red velvet parasols, with heavy gold fringes, were carried by ladies of fashion in the days of Louis XIV. At that time it was possible when crossing a bridge in Paris to hire a parasol at one end and deposit it at the other, the charge for the accommodation being a sou. Under the regency fashion went to the other extreme. Men's parasols folded into the shape of a three-cornered hat and could thus be carried elegantly under the arm. Ladies' parasols were hinged so that they could slip into the pocket, for the ladies had pockets then.—London Spectator.

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

A Slight Mistake.

The clerk was up to his ears in parasols. He was a good salesman, had a rare command of language, and knew how to expiate on the best points of the goods he sold. As he picked up a parasol from a lot on the counter and opened it he struck on attitude and admiration and said: "Now then! Look at that silk! Isn't it lovely? Particularly observe the quality, the finish, the general effect. Feel it. Pass your hand over it. No nonsense about that parasol, is there?" "No," said the lady; "it has worn well. That is, my old one. I just laid it down here."—New York Times.

HUN COLONIES WILL BE HELD BY BRITAIN

Socialist Plan of Peace Without Annexation Has Bad Faults.

REPLY TO PACIFISTS

Would Be Sin to Return
Natives to Brutal
German Rule.

London Cable.—The House of Commons to-night, after application of closure voted without division a resolution proposed by Philip Snowden, Socialist, welcoming the repudiation by the Russian Government of all proposals for imperialistic conquest and aggrandizement, and calling on the British Government to issue a similar declaration on behalf of the British democracy.

The necessity of thus voting down the resolution was explained by Lord Robert Cecil as a technicality, inasmuch as it presented an amendment to the consolidated fund bill, and expressions of regret that the House should thus be compelled seemingly to slight Russian aspirations were voiced by Lord Roberts, former Premier Asquith and others, who declared their sympathy with Russia, but deprecated the views of the small body of pacifists moving the resolution in such a manner as necessitated its rejection.

Lord Robert Cecil on behalf of the Government and Mr. Asquith were emphatic in their statements that it was impossible at the present stage to enter into negotiations with Germany and declared that the war aims of the Entente Allies as previously announced still held good.

Mr. Snowden, whose resolution was supported by a small group of pacifists, said that if Great Britain was going to maintain its alliance with Russia, it would be necessary for it to put itself into line with the policy of the new Democratic Russian Government.

He said that the mind of the Russian democracy was now concentrated on peace, and that this object would be pursued. He contended that the Russian democracy was expressing the desire and will of all democratic peoples of the Hellenic countries. The resolution would not stop in Russia, the speaker asserted; it would come into every country. If the secret service information of the Government was good, it knew better than he could tell that in one of the countries of the alliance the people were on the verge of a revolution.

QUESTION NEVER RAISED.
Mr. Snowden said that he had been informed America had refused to enter into the pact of London (not to make separate peace).

Lord Robert Cecil interrupted by saying that the question never had been raised.

Lord Robert Cecil explained that although nobody in the House was likely to quarrel with Mr. Snowden's resolution, an unfortunate impression might be caused by the fact that it must be rejected on a technical point, namely, that it presented an amendment to the Consolidated Fund bill, which must go through unamended if the business of the country was to be carried out. Lord Robert, however, was unable to accept the amendment, because it was in moving the amendment, which was not calculated to promote harmony in the House.

He was skeptical regarding Mr. Snowden's account of the pacifist views of the Italian and German Socialists. The latter, he said, had supported the Government through and through and had refused to condemn even the worst atrocities.

CARRY OUT ALL AGREEMENTS.
With regard to Mr. Snowden's question as to whether treaties concluded with Russia before the revolution were still binding, he thought that doubtless they were. Until the new Russian Government released the allies from any particular engagement entered into with the old Government, Great Britain was bound to honor and carry out her engagements, not only with Russia, but with all the allies.

Paying war tribute to the manner in which the Russian revolution had been brought about, Lord Robert, commenting on the Socialist plan for peace without annexation, alluded to the German colonies.

While it is true, he said, "that we did not take them in order to rescue the natives from German rule, but as a part of the war operations, having rescued them, we are going to hand them back?" (Cheers.)

He then read a long account of the "natives" treatment offered by the natives in both German East Africa and German West Africa, and said: "If there is any measure of success in the war, I should regard with horror the idea of returning natives who have been freed from a Government of that kind."

Then there was Poland, Alsace-Lorraine, and Italy. Irrelevantly, Lord Robert alluded to the policy of non-annexation in these cases. Lord Robert referred to Turkish cruelty and oppression in Arabia, Armenia and Syria, and said he wished to impress upon Mr. Snowden and his friends that while there might be good grounds for going to war to accomplish acts of reparation and justice, yet having done that by war, the nation could hardly be asked to abandon the fruits of such desirable achievements.

NO REPARATION FOR OUTRAGES?

Then what about Belgium, Serbia and northern France, and this direction of peaceful merchant ships? Was there to be no reparation? He asked the suggestion that the allies should enter into peace negotiations with Germany. To find no indication in the German Chancellor's speech of inclination even to state the terms of peace, Germany was ready to accept, and until the spirit which characterized the Chancellor's speech was exhausted it would be unwise and undignified on the part of the allies to discuss terms with Germany.

So far as he was able to judge, the same thing had happened to Germany as had happened to the allies. There was a popular movement and a popular demand for reform, and an appearance of yielding by the Government. This was followed by a protest, generally couched in offensive terms, by the junkers, and then an immediate surrender to the junkers.

MUST BE REJECTED.
Mr. Asquith also said he regretted the resolution had been moved in such form that it must be rejected. He said the most important feature of the debate was not the acute division of the general agreement of opinion which had been reached, but the most unfortunate fact that the resolution conveyed the impression that Great Britain had abandoned its sympathy with the Russian people, who now stand firmly and finally emancipated themselves. He said the people of Great Britain were in sympathy, as far as they understood the purport of the announcement, made by the Russian Government, with its aims and views in the war and its conditions for a durable peace.

If the war was to end in an honorable peace there must be annexation, and the annexation of the entrapped populations who were laboring under despotisms, and re-creation of strategic positions as safeguards against future attacks might be necessary.

NO CHANGES IN AIMS.

"When the Russian Government asks us to join them in a non-annexation policy it must be in the limited sense of no acquisition or extension of territory for political or economical aggrandizement," said Mr. Asquith. "Our war aims have not changed, and as long as we continue our policy within these limits we can pursue the war with a good conscience and regard a peace based on that foundation as the only peace which will justify our sacrifice."

The German Chancellor's speech shows that these responsible for the German policy have abandoned the counsel of moderation and reason, and are determined to pursue the wicked and nefarious course they entered upon three years ago. So long as that is the case we cannot fail or relax a hair's breadth our determination to pursue the war to a victorious end."

BUY LOYALTY OF FOE STATES

Berlin Bribing of Bavaria and Prussia.

Splitting Alsace-Lorraine Causes Jealousy.

The Hague Cable.—The sensational revelations of Die Post regarding the German intention to split Alsace-Lorraine between Bavaria and Prussia has been practically suppressed by the German censors in other papers. The Lokal Anzeiger, however, adds that confidential communications have been made to Alsace-Lorraine Parliamentary deputies at Strasbourg, whilst the Vossische says the division is now projected to great satisfaction of the great Central party, whose other chief stronghold is Bavaria. The revelations explain the importance attached at the time to the speech of King Ludwig of Bavaria to Bavarian troops quartered at Strasbourg on May 7th. The King said he was especially glad to greet his subjects in "this ancient German city, recognized by us for years ago. Our enemies want to wrest it and this fair country again from us, but they shall not do so." Probably this huge bribe to Bavaria also explains the journey of the Bavarian Premier, Count Hertling, to Vienna in April, and the visit of the German Minister of War, Erzerberg, to Berlin, and his friends had pushed through a deal with the Prussians. With Bavaria's promise to back him in his pocket Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg yesterday was able to show a bold front to his opponents. Conservatives and Socialists in the Reichstag.

There will be furious jealousy in other German States who have not been bribed. Already Saxony is kicking, and one of her Parliamentarians says in the Vossische Zeitung that whilst other States have been on the grab Saxony has been forced to sacrifice herself for the great cause, only to find themselves shouldered into the cold when it came to a distribution of food and political influence. This deputy says: "For reasons which cannot be discussed now the most important has been the ground amongst the masses of the people during this war." He urges Saxony to start Parliamentary Government, thus giving the rest of Germany lead and re-establishing Saxony importance in Germany. Meantime the German Government has got to bribe Austria which is sulking badly. According to some German papers the bribe is to be the throne of Poland to the Austrian Archduke, Karl Stephen. Die Post says the appointment of Regent for Poland will take place almost immediately.

PLAN TO WEAR GERMANS DOWN

That is the Way the Allies
Are Working.

No Sensational Pushes at Present.

London Cable.—"I will tell you now what our plan has been and is on the western front," said Gen. Maurice. In his weekly talk on the war situation, "It is to wear the Germans down. We realize that there is no possibility of a sensational push at the moment. We need not expect sensational pushes into enemy territory at present. It will be slow hammer and tongue fighting such as we have been conducting in the battle of Arras."

"And we are succeeding in our object. When we began the offensive we were thoroughly prepared, and the result was that the German losses were much heavier than ours. Later we have been forcing the Germans to assume the offensive and attack us in order to prevent us from going forward. This is just what we want, for the Germans are compelled to throw men against us under unfavorable conditions without having time to make deliberate preparations."

"The result has been disastrous for them, as their losses are tremendous. In making these counter-attacks the Germans have used virtually all their reserves, and nobody uses fresh troops unless it is necessary."

"In this connection I may cite as a significant fact that the German higher command lately adopted a deliberate policy of deceit in the issuance of official statements. This was not done in the early part of the war and the reasons for the present deception are due to obvious causes. The German officials are trying to bolster up the courage of their people and make them patient, in the meantime the German army is doing everything possible to tire us out, and hold us while the German submarines work. They hope to win by starving us out through the U-boat campaign."

Discussing the Italian offensive, General Maurice said it was launched partly because of the allied successes in the west. The Germans had been forced to keep their troops along the western front, thereby leaving Italy free.

FRANCE IS PLEASED

With the New Army Appointments.

Paris Cable.—(New York Times cable).—"A character and a will," is the figure of the new generalissimo, and this sentiment is unanimously shared by both press and public. He is also the leader as General Cerdilly writes in the Echo de Paris, whose appointment to the post has been a fait accompli throughout, whose merits have always been superior to the task allotted him. The public generally expected this nomination. Such a change in the chief command is not without precedent, however, as the same occurred during the siege of Sebastopol, in the Crimean war, when Marshal Canrobert handed over supreme control to Marshal Pellesier, who had been serving under his orders. The appointment of General Foch, who has always been greatly appreciated in military circles, is also unanimously applauded.

Regarding General Nivelle, the following passage from the Temps sums up accurately the opinion of those whose judgment is not swayed by outward appearances: "General Nivelle takes over command of the army of the Marne. The conditions under which he abandons the supreme post can harm neither his authority nor his prestige. He keeps them intact, and the decision taken regarding him cannot diminish the confidence of his subordinates."

FIND PLOT FOR SEPARATE PEACE

Group of Influential Roumanian Traitors.

But People as a Whole Are With Allies.

Odessa, Cable.—According to the Odessa Listok secret correspondence has recently been carried on between a group of influential Roumanians resident in Jassy and others who remained in Bucharest with regard to terms of peace with Germany. Copies of the correspondence are stated to be in the hands of Milukoff, Russian War Minister. The Roumanians state that the existence of these intrigues was known to War Minister Gutchkoff. From trustworthy Roumanian sources, however, it is informed that the correspondence from Bucharest was dictated by Germans. No doubt need be entertained with regard to the veracity of the Roumanian people and the army, which remains loyal to the Russian alliance. While German soldiers are endeavoring to fraternize with Russian revolutionaries all along the frontier, German aeroplanes have been engaged in killing Russian workmen and others at Kilia, at the mouth of the Danube. Five aeroplanes took part in the attack.

Opportunity sometimes knocks at the door, but Op. never knocks so loudly as his brother, Imp.

CEMENT UNION OF BRITAIN-U. S.

Co-operation of the Navies Against Foe Will Do It,

Says Sir E. Carson in Welcoming Speech.

London Cable. Speaking at the Navy League luncheon to American officers to-day, Sir Edward Carson, First Lord of the Admiralty, remarked that the date of the first almost coincided with the arrival of the first installment of the assistance which the American navy was going to give to the allies in the formidable task which lies before them.

As First Lord of the Admiralty, Sir Edward said he desired to express his appreciation of the speedy way in which the American Government had rendered assistance. He extended a hearty welcome to the officers and men who had come to do this work.

"This evidence of absolute harmony and co-operation between the British and American navies will never be broken until the enemy is crushed," Sir Edward continued. "It will not be broken even then, because it will be cemented by many events which will have led to the liberation of humanity. Whatever the distance between the Old and the New World, we have always cherished one great ideal—love of liberty and progress, and determination to beat back the aggressor, whoever he may be, who dares to lay hands on the fabric of civilization which we together have built up."

DUINO TAKEN BY NEW DRIVE OF ITALIANS

Important Town 12 Miles Northwest of Trieste Occupied.

DRIVE ROLLS ON

Over 4,000 Prisoners Taken —Foe Counter-Attacks Broke in Disorder.

Paris Cable.—A despatch to La Liberté from Turin reports that the Italian troops have captured the town of Duino. The despatch says an announcement of the taking of this important strategic point will soon be made officially. The town of Duino is on the Gulf of Trieste, about 12 miles north-west of Trieste, Austria's principal seaport.

Austrian troops have strongly counter-attacked the Italians in positions they had gained in carrying out their offensive movement. The enemy reaction, however, was failed. The Rome War Office announces. The prisoners taken by the Italians since Monday number 4,021. Five additional small-calibre guns have been captured. The Italians have made further progress in their drive, pushing ahead on Mount Vodice, and also south of Grazigna, north-east of Gorizia.

The first official statement issued at Rome reads:

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

"Julian (front). The expected reaction of the enemy against the successes won by our troops violently manifested itself yesterday, but every-where failed, thanks to the solid resistance of our men."

"In the Bodreze region and on the plain, the enemy of height 333 enemy attacks were easily repulsed."

"Fighting in the zone between Monte Cucco and Vodice was bitter and lengthy. Considerable enemy masses, supported by the fire of numerous batteries, were repeatedly launched against our new positions. Early this morning they were repulsed, and the Pechux bastion of Monte Cucco from height 611 to height 624 remained firmly in our possession. Moreover, we made appreciable progress toward the important summit of height 652 on the Vodice."

"In the zone east of Gorizia enemy counter-attacks, directed particularly against the summit of height 174 and to the east of the Vertobizza torrent broke down under our fire. Afterwards our infantry, assuming a counter-offensive, occupied the important height to the south of Grazigna after a desperate conflict."

ROLLED BACK IN DISORDER.

"On the Carso plateau the enemy, with the evident object of relieving our pressure in the region of Gorizia, attempted a powerful effort against our positions at Monte Vanocaccio and Monte Patti on the northern sector of the plateau. Successive waves of his infantry were broken down by our well directed fire or rolled back in disorder after having suffered serious losses."

"On the whole front from Tolmino to the sea there were continuous actions by artillery of all calibres. The enemy artillery continues its work of devastation on the village of Gorizia. Some shells hit one of our field hospitals in Cervignano, where there were six victims. Our airships made a raid in the Frigido Valley. Favored by clouds our daring airmen reached 4,021, of whom 124 were officers. We also have captured five additional guns of small calibre."

"Last night one of our airships made a raid in the Frigido Valley. Favored by clouds our daring airmen descended to a low altitude and dropped bombs and fired with machine guns upon the enemy's positions. The airships afterwards returned safely to their base."

THE AUSTRIAN CLAIM.

The official statement issued by the Austrian War Office last night reads: "In the zone of the enemy's positions, the situation is unchanged."

"Italian theatre. After a comparatively calm night in the Isonzo sector fighting broke out again. Wednesday morning the main attack of the Italian masses, who were continuously reinforced, was directed against a chain of heights east of the Piana Sileana Valley and our lines before the gates of Gorizia. The fighting proceeded day and night with great fierceness, the attacking and defending forces changing roles from hour to hour. Fresh reserves brought up night and again by the reinforced army to new attacks suffered great losses."

"Further south in the sector of Monte Manabrallo, after repeated unsuccessful attacks on our positions, the enemy ceased his assaults in the afternoon."

"Equally successful for us was the fighting on the road east of Gorizia, where there was a struggle throughout the day for possession of our first lines. By evening all our trenches except some small nests were thoroughly cleared of the enemy. We captured four hundred prisoners."

"Elsewhere there was strong artillery action."

HEAVY GAINS BY BRITISH IN BALKANS

Capture Three Miles of Trenches in Doiran
Region.

SURPRISE BY SERBS

Bulgars Lose Heavily in Men to Both Allied Forces.

London Cable.—British troops in Macedonia have made an important advance on the Doiran front and captured the village of Klapri on the Struma front, it is announced officially.

Enemy trenches on a front of 5,000 yards to an average depth of 500 yards near Krastall, southwest of Lake Doiran, also were captured by the British and consolidated. The official statement says:

"On the Doiran front Monday night we advanced our line southwest of Krastall on a front of 5,000 yards to an average depth of 500 yards and consolidated the positions gained despite the heavy shelling."

"On the Struma front we occupied the village of Klapri, two and a half miles north-northwest of Prosenik, taking some prisoners. We also captured the enemy's advanced trenches southwest of Ernekol, one and a half miles north of Baraki Juma, on a front of 3,000 yards. Seventy prisoners were taken. Our casualties were slight."

"Our naval air service carried out two successful bombing raids on camps in the rear of the enemy's lines."

The French War Office report on the Krastall and Dautli, the British troops captured the enemy's first line to a depth of 700 metres, on a front of five kilometres (about three miles).

"In the course of their counter-attacks on the front of Srka di Legu-Hadjj Barimah the Bulgarians suffered heavy losses and left some prisoners in our hands. The positions taken have been held by our troops, notwithstanding the bad weather and fog."

FILLED WITH DEAD.

Serbian Headquarters, Cable.—On Monday the Serbs proceeded to attack the Bulgarian third line of defenses on the front of Dobropolje. At Neglenia, further east, a small party of our men stormed a precipitous height crowned with trenches manned by hundreds of Bulgarians. Even our attack officers were lost in water at this performance, the approach to the height being almost a sheer precipice from the top. The defenders, being unable to fire, hurled rocks and grenades. The Serbs were the uttermost defence of Golobova possession, obtained without the loss of a single man. It was valuable, as facilitating further operations. The whole of height 1,824, which constitutes the third Bulgarian line of defence of Dobropolje, was captured. Parts of the height were recovered by enemy counter-attacks.

The Serbs again continued to fight till late in the morning, when the position remained in our hands. In these engagements the Bulgarians for the first time employed asphyxiating gases, but they contained their effect in the open air was almost nil. Our losses were slight, thanks to the Serbian mode of assault. Bulgarian prisoners say they never see our men until they are in the front. The approach of the Serbs is cut-like. They creep up in ones, twos and threes on all sides, and at a given signal leap forward with a startling yell, which the Bulgars dread. French airmen report that the captured trenches, as well as those on the front of Dobropolje, are full of Bulgarian dead.

"Old man, you are too close in money matters. Your friends are beginning to classify you as a tightwad."

"What does it matter? I'd rather be classified as a tightwad than a good thing."—Kansas City Journal.

DESTROYERS OF U. S. NOW IN WAR ZONE

Squadron Reaches Queenstown, and is Now Patrolling the Seas.

BRITISH PRAISE

Fleet Officials Say Yankee
Well Equipped and Well Manned.

Queens-town Cable.—A squadron of American torpedo-boat destroyers has safely crossed the Atlantic and is patrolling the seas in war service.

The American Navy's actual entry into the war zone has already been productive of a brush between a destroyer and a German U-boat, according to an announcement by the British Admiralty, but the result of it has not been made public.

The destroyer squadron arrived in Queens-town after an uneventful voyage across the Atlantic, but almost immediately after a formal exchange of greetings with the British naval officials, put to sea again for the hard work that is before it.

The Commander of the British fleet was waiting on board his ship and sent wireless greetings to the American units as soon as they were in sight off Queens-town, steaming in a long line into the harbor.

After the exchange of shore greetings, and the British Commander had congratulated the American officers on their safe voyage, he asked: "When will you be ready for business?"

"We can start at once," the American Commander replied promptly.

"The equipment of the destroyers was found on inspection by the British Commander to be in excellent condition, and remarkably well suited to the requirements on this side of the ocean. In fact, it was said by the British officer that the only thing lacking in the equipment of the American sailors was heavier clothing. It appears that the Americans were wearing clothes too light for the varying conditions of weather they will encounter in these waters. This lack, however, was quickly provided for."

After the formalities had ended and the needs of the men were attended to, the American ships at once put out to sea.

"They are certainly a fine body of men and what's more, they are well equipped," said the British Commander, as he watched the destroyers file seaward.

"One of the American destroyers began war duty even before reaching this side of the Atlantic. This was when it picked up and escorted through the danger zone one of the largest of the Atlantic liners. This action so pleased the British passengers on board that they sent a message of greeting and appreciation to the Commander of the destroyer."

Rear-Admiral Sims, U.S.N., is in general command of all the United States naval forces that are sent to European waters, and is in daily touch with the Chief of the British Naval Staff.

BEATTY GREETED MAYO.

London Cable.—Vice-Admiral Sir David Beatty, Commander of the British Grand Fleet, has sent the following message to Admiral Henry Mayo, Commander of the United States Atlantic Fleet:

"The Grand Fleet rejoices that the Atlantic Fleet will now share in preserving the liberties of the world and maintaining the chivalry of the sea."

Admiral Mayo replied: "The United States Atlantic Fleet appreciates the message from the British Fleet and welcomes opportunities for work with the British Fleet for the freedom of the seas."

BUSY THERE TWO WEEKS AGO.

Washington Report.—American destroyers, under command of Rear-Admiral William Sowden Mayo, United States Navy, have for two weeks been operating against German U-boats in European waters in joint association with British and French vessels.

Official announcement of this fact was made by Secretary Daniels at 3.30 o'clock yesterday. In a prepared statement which was issued after conferences that followed the receipt of a press despatch from London late this afternoon saying that the British Admiralty had today announced the arrival of American destroyers in British waters. The size of the American naval force, the names of the destroyers embraced in it and movements of these vessels is withheld by the Navy Department for military and patriotic reasons.

MET A SUB.

But British Cruiser Saved
the Sardinian.

Boston Report.—Captain James McDonald, of the Allan Liner Sardinian, reported to-day that he encountered a submarine off the Irish coast while on a voyage from a British port to the continent. The submarine, which was several hundred yards away, apparently was trying to launch a torpedo at the steamer. Captain McDonald said, when a British cruiser came in sight, immediately the submarine craft turned toward the cruiser, and let loose torpedoes, which missed the ship, he said, whereupon the warship opened fire and sent eight shots at the submarine, forcing it to submerge. The submarine resumed its course, and the Sardinian continued on its way. McDonald said he could not tell whether any of the shots took effect.

Come Over And Help Civilization

If there is any nation on earth, outside the Central Powers, whose voice is entitled to be heard, whose utterances with respect to the war should be carefully weighed and considered that nation is France.

Since 1870 she sought only peace and although the menace of a second German attack always hung over her, this menace did not prevent her from building up the second largest colonial empire in the world.

But she sought peace in vain, because her great neighbor to the east had resolved that France should be further pillaged, and not only France pillaged but the whole world brought to Germany's feet.

For almost three years France has borne the shock of war on her own soil. By experiences as bitter as any that have come in modern times, France knows of what sort of creatures are the Huns and of what sort of a diabolical thing is German Kultur. When France speaks of the war the civilized world should stand uncovered and at attention.

France spoke the other day to the United States through her special representative, M. Viviani, who, in company with Marshall Joffe, visited the Central West, and went as far as Kansas City.

In his speech in the latter city M. Viviani struck a note, keyed primarily for American ears, but which should be given heed to in this Dominion and especially in this Province.

Addressing the citizens of Kansas City, and at the same time speaking to the whole people of the United States, M. Viviani said:

"You free Americans so well understand why thousands and thousands of our children now are sleeping their last. You know it was not because there was in our hearts the desire to conquer.

You will come, not to help France, but to aid the cause of civilization. France, bleeding and fighting, with many destroyed homes and tombs, has held the German flood that now is going back. Come to France, you Americans and help civilization and liberty. It is the best way, the only way, to ensure peace of the world."

It was the cause of civilization that France espoused, when she took up the challenge of Germany during the closing days of July, 1914; and it was the same cause that Britain espoused when, upon the violation of Belgium, she threw her sword into the balance and staked her existence upon the issue of the conflict.

Britain's coming in helped France tremendously from the first. Small as it was, the British Army at the Marne was an appreciable

Shortage of Swede Turnip Seed

Swede turnip growers are urged this spring to endeavour to secure and transplant a few sound roots to produce seed for themselves and their neighbours. Owing to the abnormal conditions now prevailing there will likely be very little swede seed for planting in the spring of 1918 unless our Canadian swede turnip growers make provision for their own supplies by growing the seed themselves. Canadian supplies of swede and most other field root and garden seeds formerly came from Europe but this source is now practically cut off. The prospects for home grown seed have been reduced by the present price of swede turnips for food purposes, as it would now take nearly two hundred dollars worth of fall grown swede turnips to transplant an acre for seed purposes. This factor has had the unfortunate effect of reducing the area in the eastern provinces that would otherwise have been planted for the production of swede seeds.

OBITUARY

On Sunday last, May 20th 1917 a memorial service was held in St. Mark's Church, Bell View, Ont. in memory of Pte. Jas. Caldwell, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Caldwell.

He was 18 years of age on Jan. 11th, 1916 and enlisted for overseas service with the 155th Battalion several days later. He was killed in action on April 9th 1917.

The service was very impressive and was conducted by Rev. S. E. Morton. The church was crowded to the doors and scores of people were known to stay outside.

Pte. Caldwell was well known in this vicinity and was respected by one and all. He was one of those who do much in a quiet way, being thoughtful and intellectual. He was very fond of reading and was exceptionally well read for one of his years. He was one of the older members of the Organized Boys Class, "The Argonauts" of St. Mark's B. The bereaved family have the heartfelt sympathy of all.

Letter to Mrs. George McGowan

March, 30th, 1917

Dear Madam

Just a few lines to you wishing you every success and thanking you very much for your kindness, as I was the lucky one to receive the pair of socks inside of which I found a note asking the receiver to acknowledge the same. As I am sure that they will be very much better than the ones that are sometimes issued to us, I am very thankful to receive them and as this short letter has to be sent I again thank you very much for your kindness.

Yours truly,
Pte. Jack Wynn, 15 platoon, No. 455897, R.C.R., France.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"I am very pleased to see you, Lady Delamere," said the duchess. "Your husband and I are old friends, and I should have been broken-hearted if you had passed through without coming to see me! Will you sit down? Lord Delamere shall bring you some tea, and who made room beside herself on the broad ottoman. Signa sat down, and Hector went for the tea. There were no servants in the room, though the vestibule was crowded with the duchess's liveries, with the exception of her grace's own maid, who sat at a large table and poured out the tea, while the visitors fetched for themselves. He knew the customs of the house, and went to the table for the tea, and the duchess, looking after him for a moment with a strange expression which was rather sad and wistful, turned to Signa.

"And so you are the heroine of the romantic tale which has so deeply interested us all, my dear?" she said, with a smile.

"A very poor sort of heroine," said Signa.

"A very lovely one, certainly," said her grace, with a charming smile that robbed the retort of all rudeness. "And is it true that he ran away with you to Scotland with that magnificent pair of horses you drive about?"

"Not at all true," said Signa, with a blush and a laugh. "We did not run away, and it would have been of no use going to Scotland, because they don't marry people there in the fashion they used to do. We were married in a little country church in Devonshire."

"Really?" Then she paused. "How happy you must be!"

"Signa did not know quite what to say to this, so remained silent."

"And he thought that he could keep you shut up in Paris like a little bird?" said her grace. "That was a wild idea! Why, we were all dying to know you, and should have stormed that pretty little house of yours if you had not surrendered. Laura Derwent is a very dear friend of mine, and has written to tell me all about you. And you are so happy, are you not?"

"In a lower voice."

"Yes, very," said Signa, frankly.

"And you will hate me for interrupting your dream, and dragging you out into the cold world, will you not?"

"I shall not, indeed," said Signa. "I think it was very kind of you to call."

"I mean that we shall be very great friends while you are here," said her grace. "We must do what we can—to amuse you; and as to Lord Delamere—he must not be selfish and wish to monopolize you. Why the honeymoon is over! According to Parisian custom, he ought to quite have tired of you by this time!" But she smiled curiously and shook her head.

Then she beckoned to a gentleman with her fan, and when he came up with a sort of hushed eagerness as if all his object and aim in life were to obey the wishes of her grace, she said:

"Marquis, will you see if the duke is in the room and bring him to me?"

The marquis departed on his errand, and her grace introduced Signa to a dozen or so of great people, and the little chain of courtiers drew closer. It was a trying moment for any young girl, more trying still for a newly-made bride, but Signa bore her position with her usual composure and sweet self-unsconsciousness, and the favorable impression she created was evident in the manner of her grace, who leaned back and smiled with haughty satisfaction.

Presently the marquis returned, accompanied by the old man with a wig thick on his face, yet not thick enough to hide a network of wrinkles. He came up with a jaunty step, amazingly juvenile, and looked at the duchess with a fine smile.

It was the great duke himself. He had been fetched away from a group of statesmen who were talking politics of the utmost importance, and there was a burning impatience in his soul, though not a trace of it was visible in his smiling face, as he stood waiting for his wife's commands.

"Victor, come and know Lady Delamere, Lord Delamere's wife," she said. "My dear," to Signa, "this is my husband."

The duke smiled still more broadly and unmeaningly, and bowed low, then, as his vacant eyes took in suddenly Signa's loveliness, the smile vanished, and a real look came upon his face. Without a word he approached the ottoman, those near it making room for him, and began to talk to her.

And then, in an instant, it was known that Signa's fame was established; that the duke had set his seal upon it, and she was to be a great personage.

Lord Delamere, as he sat, glanced at the duke, and the other, could see the crowd round the Duke and Signa grow larger, and that she had become the centre of attraction; and he smiled to himself sarcastically: the quiet days when they used to be all in all to each other were over.

The duke himself accompanied Signa to the victoria—an honor only accorded to his greatest favorites—and when she left the salon, the room re-echoed her praises. The duke's verdict was very short, but emphatic: "After all," he said, with the un- real smile upon his face once more, "there is no beauty like that of a young pure English girl."

"Well," said Hector, leaning back and looking at Signa's flushed face with a smile—"well, are you satisfied?"

"The only sentiment on my mind at present," said Signa, "is—confusion! What a crowd of people! It was like the crush-room at the opera. And she receives them twice a week! What do they find to talk about?"

"Each other," he said, laughing. "Poor kind of amusement. Isn't it; but we are in for it now, you will see!"

He was quite right; on the morrow came a shoal of invitations with the pack of visiting cards, and Signa reluctantly accepted one from the duchess, that of a magnificent party, a brilliant gathering, of rich and beautiful women and distinguished men; but it was felt, and admitted afterward, that of them all there was no one more lovely than the young English girl; and that Lord Delamere, without a single order on his black coat, save the band of blue ribbon, looked the greatest partisan amongst the gentlemen. The social treadmill, as Hector called it, had begun, and from that day Signa took her place in the great social world, and shone there like a bright star. It was then that she understood the meaning of the vast wealth at her disposal. At the bottom of Lord Delamere's passionate love for his bride was as almost a passionate pride in her, and as he was forced to share her presence with the world, he took a grim kind of satisfaction in seeing her at the head of it.

It was known amongst the most eminent of the tradespeople that if they had anything out of the common in the way of precious stones or articles of feminine adornment, they could at once find a purchaser in Lord Delamere, and accordingly Signa found herself possessed of suits of diamonds that had been coveted by every woman in her set. North surprised himself in designing costumes which should get some share of the notice which was lavished upon Lady Delamere. The head of a noble family offered his palatial mansion to Lord Delamere as better adapted to Lady Delamere's position than the little house in the Champs, but Signa declined steadfastly.

"We have been so happy here!" she pleaded. "Don't let us leave it while we are here." And Hector had kissed her and nodded assent with a thrill of gratification.

He went with her everywhere, and stood watching her triumphs, quietly proud of them. Sometimes, as he leant against the wall of some corner men and women would come to speak to him and speak of her beauty, and the nameless charm which did more for her even than her loveliness, which was now the talk of Paris; and he would listen with his grave smile, and say some few words, and none knew the pride that welled up in his heart.

It was, though she knew it not, a dangerous pre-eminence. There were men continually about her who would have given their lives for one word or smile of more than ordinary kindness from her; there were men who had lost their hearts as utterly as Sir Frederic had done. Had she been anything but absolutely pure and innocent of even the appearance of evil, there might have been peril for her; but her love for Hector was so obvious that like a halo it surrounded her, like a glorious charm, it protected her.

As for him, he was almost as popular as Signa herself, and yet there was a certain reserve about him that kept most men at arm's length. It was not pride or hauteur, but a nameless something they could not understand. In very truth, his life was so wrapped up in his darling that his love was all-sufficient for him. The world was but an unreal, phantasmal atmosphere, through which she, the only real thing, as it were, moved. He used the gay world of Paris as a plaything for her, and was waiting until she tired of it to find some other amusement to take its place. The women envied her position, her wealth, her diamonds, but there were some, and many, who in their hearts envied her husband beyond all else.

"He has no one else when she is in the room," said the duchess one night, as she looked beyond her chain of courtiers to where Lord Delamere stood, alone and silent, his dark eyes fixed on Signa, who was dancing. "When she speaks he listens to catch every word, though he may be talking to some one else with the most apparent interest. There never was such devotion—never!"

"Perhaps it is a mere suggestion," said a statesman, with a wave of his hand. "Perhaps Lord Delamere is jealous?"

The duchess laughed. "You have not been amongst us long," she said quietly, "or you would never even make the suggestion. She thinks him a god and worships him—that is all."

The statesman bowed courteously. "Yes," indeed? It is strange, Lord Delamere was always fortunate. I remember—"

The duchess shrugged her shoulders over so faintly.

"Do not," she said. "Every one has forgotten Lord Delamere's youthful sins."

"And she—" asked the statesman, with a fine smile.

"Never knew of them," retorted the duchess.

But she was wrong in point of fact; people had not forgotten, and often, as he stood silent and preoccupied, some one answering a question would explain who he was, and whisper some of the stories of which Signa knew nothing.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The world left them but a few hours to be alone with each other now, and Hector snatched every moment of such time as something precious. He would hurry over his dressing in the evening, that he might go and sit in her room and watch the elaborate toilet, which afforded her maid a great deal more satisfaction and pleasure than it did Signa. On the night that she had been a success, Signa was dressing for a state ball. She had dismissed her maid, and was standing before the glass, putting on the diamonds, which the man who sold them had declared to be equal to, if not purer than those of the wife of the great American millionaire. Hector was sitting in a low easy-chair, leaning back to watch her with luxurious content.

"Like Byron you awake one morning to find yourself famous. I wonder how it feels to be the great planet in the hemisphere of social stars. Does your head get turned now and again, Signa? Tell me! I like to make a study of these things. What sentiments do you feel most acutely when you are queuing it in those crowded rooms? To-night now, for instance, when they come round you like the moths round the candle, any one of them ready to think himself fortunate if he can hold your fan, and really happy if he can get a dance; when the duke, for whom all make way, tells you in that whisper of his which can be heard by every one, that your dress is simply perfection—how shall you feel?" And he laughs softly.

She turns, and yet her glove fall upon the dressing-table, her violet eyes fixed upon him questioningly as a smile curves her lips.

"Come," he says, with an air of gentle banter, "don't let your modesty overcome your truthfulness. Tell me exactly how it takes you. I have often wondered, as I have stood at some remote distance and watched you, it is so different to the old life in Northampton, and yet how calmly you take it; if you had always had a duke in your retinue, you could not accept the fact with greater composure. What are you thinking of, Signa?"

"For a moment longer she is silent, then her eyes are suffused, and she glides towards him and kneels at his side."

"I shall tell you—honestly and truly," she murmurs.

"Certain," he says, taking the one ungloved hand and kissing it. "I am thinking of—you," she says, and her voice thrills with suppressed passion.

He looks into her eyes and the color comes into his face for a moment; but he says, with that quiet, which comes of intense self-suppression: "Of me, my queen?"

"Of you," she repeats, and she takes his hand and puts it round her white neck, where it lies against the diamonds. "Hector, I wonder whether—ah! how shall I go on?"

"Go on," he says, "dear everything, dear," he says, gently.

"It is so hard," she murmurs. "But I have often wondered if you thought me frivolous and—and heartless, all this giddy, whirling time!"

"Heartless, No," he says, quietly, his eyes fixed on hers.

"Yes, heartless!" she says. "Day after day, night after night, it has been one rush and hurry; we have lived in a crowd and confusion, that seems to me, when I think of it quietly, like a mad dream. It is often like a dream to me when they are all round me, buzzing like bees, with the music filling the air, and the lights dazzling and bewildering, and—and then I wake and see you standing silent and alone, and I wish—ah, Hector! if you could see my heart—I wish that you and I were wrecked on St. Clare, and were quite alone, where the glittering, buzzing crowd could not reach us. And with a little sound that is scarcely a sob, she draws near to him, and lays her head upon his shoulder.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS OF GREAT VALUE

Mrs. J. A. Lagace, Ste. Perpetue, Que., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets have been of great value to me, and I would strongly recommend them to other mothers." Thousands of other mothers say the same thing. They have become convinced through actual use of the Tablets that nothing can equal them in regulating the bowels and stomach, driving out constipation and indigestion, breaking up colds and simple fevers, expelling worms and curing colic. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

And with a little sound that is scarcely a sob, she draws near to him, and lays her head upon his shoulder.

He is silent for a moment, as he presses her to his heart, and an answer is knit with troubled doubt.

"My darling!" he murmurs. "And you said nothing of this! I thought that you were happy—that, woman like, you enjoyed it! It is only natural that you should have enjoyed it! Such as you were meant to play the queen! And all this time you—"

"Have been looking for the old time when we were all in all to each other, and there was no duke to murmur flattery into a heedless ear!" she whispers.

"Great Heaven!" he says. "Why did you not tell me? A word or a look could have ended it!"

She smiles strangely.

"And that I would not have said or looked," she says. "You have said I have been a success. You said it—"

"All Paris says it, darling!"

"Well, he is so. Do you know why I have borne it and gone on? No? Because you have told me to speak, dear—because I wanted you to feel that I was not all unworthy the great name you have bestowed on me!"

"Signa! my child!" he murmurs, for the tears are streaming from her upturned eyes.

"Yes—yes," she says, swiftly, with a long breath. "You—married me, a mere nobody—without title or position; you, an earl, with a high place in the great world and—I—when the chance came to show myself worthy to stand beside you and bear your name, seized it. I care nothing for all this; I—Hector—I hate it! but I have done it and gone through it that the world might admit that you had not married beneath you."

Pale and steadfast she looks at him, and pale and steadfast he looks down at her. Then he draws her face toward him and kisses her.

"Then it was all for my sake, my darling!" he says.

"Yes," she says. "If there was at any time any pride in my heart, it was that the world should deem me worthy to be your wife and bear your name. Hector, nothing more. Often, when I have looked at you standing alone, my heart has ached for the old time; but I have whispered to myself: 'Be patient! The time will come when he will say: "You have done enough! and we shall go away and be alone once more, he and I together, and leave the crowd to itself!"'

He is silent for a moment; then he bends over her, taking her into his arms, utterly regardless of the magnificent costume which Worth expects to see chronicled in the morning papers.

"Great Heaven!" he murmurs, more to himself than to her. "Who shall know a woman's heart. And it is for me that you have done all this! My poor darling! Well, there shall be an end of it!"

"Yes, Hector?" eagerly.

"Yes, to-night shall be the last night," he says, firmly. "Why, Signa, I thought—blind fool that I was—that you were enjoying your triumphs most intensely!"

"Ah, Hector! when you—"

"I have been wrong. Forgive me, Signa. We will leave Paris at once. I have learned that you have looked pale and tired."

She smiles.

"I have often been tired, Hector; but for this night, half-hour I don't think I could have borne it."

"Good heaven! Signa, we will go to-night!"

She shakes her head.

"Not to-night, dear."

"Why not?"

She laughs, softly.

"Don't you understand? This is a great occasion, this state ball, and I have told you many that I intended to be there. Why, I think I have promised nearly all the dances."

"Well?" she says, "what would the world say if I did not put in an appearance?"

"I neither know nor care!" he says, carelessly.

THAT DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURE RHEUMATISM.

Harold D. Bertram Had Inflammatory Rheumatism and One Box of Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured It Out of His System.

Southampton, Ont., May 24.—(Special.)—That rheumatism is caused by acid in the blood, and that Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it is again proved by the case of Harold D. Bertram, a young man well and favorably known here. He had inflammatory rheumatism for two months. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him.

"The doctor said my trouble started with the grippe," Mr. Bertram states. "My hands and feet were badly swollen, and the doctor did not seem to be doing me any good. My grandmother, Mrs. G. Grasser, advised me to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. I took one box of them, and I haven't been bothered since. I am clear of the rheumatism."

That Mr. Bertram's trouble came from his kidneys is shown by his other symptoms. He had stiffness in the joints, was tired and nervous, and there were flashes of light before his eyes. He had a dragging sensation across the loins, was always thirsty, and felt heavy and sleepy after meals. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood. Cured kidneys strain the uric acid out of the blood, Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the kidneys.

THE CATACOMBS.

Between Six and Eight Million Bodies Laid There.

Nature has been kind to the Palestine, that hill where dwell the shepherd kings and where later rose the tremendous palaces of emperor after emperor, clothing its scanty ruins with lavish verdure. The silence of oblivion broods over the fragments of the halls where Domitian played with his fleas and Caligula bathed in shimmering seas of minted coins. The most compelling thing upon the whole bosky hill, says Geographic Magazine, is the little stone altar, called: Sol Deo, Sol Deo, the Unknown God.

This was really the shrine of the protecting deity of the city, the patron god of Rome, and only the priests knew the dread spirit's name. It was never written, but handed down verbally from generation to generation, because, if the common people knew where they worshipped, any traitor could reveal the sacred name to an enemy, who might bribe the deity to forget Rome.

What a contrast! The home of the Unknown God on the pleasant hillside, in the sun-sweetened air, and far underground, poor in the dank chill of the Catacombs, the altars—often the sarcophagi of martyrs—of the stout-hearted who worshipped the Known God.

Originally cemeteries, perfectly well known to the pagan authorities, these remarkable vaults and galleries and chapels, 20 to 30 feet below the surface, became hiding places for the faithful in time of persecution. More than forty of these cities of the dead, which extend around Rome in a great subterranean circle, have been explored, and it has been seen that between an Italian invader and the bones of six and eight million bodies were interred in them.

The Miracle.

Let me be thankful for the flaming day,
The noon that burns to splendor when I hear
The feet of Beauty passing on her way,
The voice of Beauty as she trembles near,
Sweet silvery wraith, my hope and my despair!
Man's path is but a pilgrimage of need
Seeking the ultimate star, the hidden fair,
And if he falters in his ruthless greed
Let him remember life, the miracle—
The rose of evening faint against the sky,
The slow moon's glory risen in the dell,
First love or children's laughter floating by—
The sweep of sudden wind among the trees—
Let me be thankful, Lord, for all of these!

A WELL PRESENTED PLAY

Stirling Citizens Enjoy Rare Treat by St. Michael's Dramatic Club of Belleville

On Monday evening of this week the people of Stirling and the vicinity were given an exceptionally rare treat by the Dramatic Club of St. Michael's Church, Belleville, entitled, "Where the Shamrock Grows", a Legendary Irish
Comedy in four acts.

A six piece Orchestra was also present which favored the audience with excellent music.

The Music Hall was well filled and the parts presented by the different actors were well received. Too much praise cannot be given to all, but especially to Molly McShane. We were not surprised at Con. falling in love with her as the entire audience did likewise. She was natural throughout and continually was she reminded from the pit of their appreciation of her sterling qualities.
Her mother also knew what it was to take part in an Irish play and like her daughter her charming personality held the audience.

Con O'Callaghan was truly wonderful, and knew how to win the heart of the one he loved.

We might speak of each one separately but as we say the cast of characters was excellent, and those who were present went away feeling that a most profitable and pleasant evening had been spent.

Proceeds were in aid of the building fund of the new Presbytery.

to the satisfaction of all, as the past year

MOTHER!

Love beckons youth to that hot bliss
Which wounds, but holds the heart in thrall.

But thou revealed love with a kiss,
Before whose sweetness care would fall, Thine was the love that longed for share

My joys, my sorrows, ease my pain,
So softly soothing, life more fair,
Roll'd gently onward calm again.

Until at last I saw thee lie,
In death's dark shadow, mother mine
I smoothed your hair and closed your eye

And kissed once more those lips of thine.

Now memory brings a thought to me
Oh, mother mine, in paradise.

Heaven's light that shines eternally
Comes from a mother's loveliest eyes.

Conscript The Cold Storage Plants

Conscription should subject all the cold storage plants in Canada to immediate government control under the War Measures Act.

Why should the Dominion Government hesitate to take over the cold storage plants?

Canada is either at war or Canada is not at war.

If Canada is at war, packing houses and cold-storage plants should not be utilized as garrisons from which extortioners can shoot at the women and children whom the soldiers have left behind.

Cold storage is a system of food preservation that has the great use of preventing food from being spoiled.

Cold storage is a system of food preservation that is liable to the great abuse of buying food at summer prices and taking the food out of the market in the hope of selling such food at famine prices next winter.

All the uses of cold storage can be preserved by keeping the plants open for the preservation of food that would otherwise spoil.

All the abuses of cold storage can be eliminated by a regulation which would provide that eggs, beef, pork and all food products must be sold out of cold storage, and sold for consumption in Canada, at a moderate advance on the price paid for these products, plus the cost of cold storage.

Cold storage could be used for the safe-keeping of the Canadian Profiteer-Huns who are robbing the stomachs of defenceless women and children.—Cobourg Post.

Whether naturalized or not makes little difference as regards the possibility of danger from a German, and because of that the internment camps in Great Britain and also here to some extent, contain many Germans who have been naturalized and thereby become legally British subjects. How futile all this is as regards genuine allegiance to Britain is now pretty well understood. The Delbruck law of 1913 gives Germans naturalized abroad full citizenship in the German Empire. The sworn allegiance of a naturalized German is therefore, a sham. He enjoys the benefits of citizenship in the country in which he is naturalized while at heart and according to the law of the land of birth he is still a German subject. Denaturalize them all except such as can give public proof of their loyalty, to whom fresh certificates of naturalization could be granted.

Letter from Lieut Clancey

Mr. and Mrs. C. U. Clancey have received the following letter from their son Lieut. E. C. Clancey, No. 12 squadron, Royal Flying Corps, France:

France, 4-6-17

Dearest Mother, Dad and All:

Well, I have good news for you all to-day. Yesterday afternoon I shot down a Hun plane. My squadron has been out here nearly eighteen months and it is only the third machine that has been brought down by the squadron in that time, so, of course, all the fellows are awfully keen.

The Artillery plane we drove could only go about 55 miles an hour, whereas Fritz in his scouting plane was going from 120 to 130 miles an hour, so he was really going rings around us. Suddenly I heard a lumpy noise around us, and the next second a Hun plane was going for us pell-mell. I grabbed my machine gun and let him have all the lead he wanted. He put his nose down and crashed to the ground. The pilot wondered what I was shooting at, when I first started.

I never before experienced the same sensation as I did when I saw the Hun plane crashing. I just felt like crawling back and begging my pilot. He is a prince of a fellow about my own age.

Another squadron saw the Hun come down, and when it was announced who brought it down, they sent all kinds of compliments. My C. O. is simply tickled to death to think that one of his squadrons brought down a Hun, because with our slow machines we are supposed to be gone when a Hun scout attacks us.

Don't worry mother, you see I am quite capable of taking care of myself.

May 5th

Well, here I am scribbling a line to you again. This is a peach of a day over here but very hot and sultry. Expect to go up in the air in a few minutes, so thought I would get busy and write before I went up.

Flew over old Vimy Ridge. When I left the front line trenches there nine weeks ago, you couldn't put your head above the parapet, and now there is a big camp where our front line used to be, and observation balloons are floating over the ridge where the Hun used to be. All this has happened in nine weeks, so you can imagine how hot things are over here now.

I suppose Dad has the farm all in seed by now. Tell him I will put it in by this time next year, if all is well. I'll bet he will laugh at that because he always thought I was very clumsy with horses, but I would like to see him ploughing with some of these French ploughs. They are very clumsy and crude, but they certainly have fine big horses.

McKay of Toronto, Ex Moderator of the General Assembly and one of the most beloved Ministers of the Presbyterian Church will conduct the service.

It is a good thing to allow wheat from the United States to come into Canada free of duty, why would it not be a good thing to allow potatoes to come in free as well? They are subject to a specific duty of 20 cents per bushel, and an ad valorem war tax of 7 1/2 per cent. Soon new potatoes will be obtainable from Florida and Virginia. The Canadian consumers would get some relief and the Canadian growers would not suffer because the time for getting American potatoes will have passed before the Canadian grower can place his on the market.

Mr. Earl Eggleston of Bank of Montreal staff met with an accident near the Craigheads on Saturday evening which nearly cost him his life. While motoring to Belleville the steering gear of his car went wrong and in trying to get out of a rut in the road the car shot into the ditch, throwing him against a fence fracturing 3 ribs and injuring his head. His wounds were heard by Mr. Everett Fox who was passing by—Earl was brought home and Dr. Potts was soon in attendance. His many friends are pleased to learn that he is able to be around.

Charm of Prahova.

No traveler who has visited Roumania returns without praising the wonders of Prahova. Here, after one has passed the heights of Predel, is a charming valley in the midst of forests, of great rocks and spouting waters. The landscape evokes recollections of Switzerland, with architecture that recalls the Orient. Azuga, Bustena, are seated on the bank of a tumultuous river. Farther away is Sinalia. The court and the Roumanian aristocracy have built in this delightful valley their summer homes. There are no large hotels. All that made life at Bukharest is taken by summer sojourners to the shadows offered by Prahova and its sweet freshness. Near Sinalia the valley widens and Campina appears, the chief city of the coal lands and of the salt mines. Animals that are at liberty assemble about a block of salt to lick it, for salt, like petroleum, is everywhere.

Population by Sex.

About half the probable population of the world has been enumerated with relation to sex. About 50.3 per cent male, 49.7 per cent female, is the result of this count. Only in Europe, among continents, do the females outnumber the males, the proportion being: Female, 50.4 per cent; male, 49.4 per cent. In most parts of the world of which we have information the reverse is true. The percentage of males in British India is 50.9; in the tributary states, 51.7; in Japan, 50.5. In the United States by the last census there were 100 males to 100 females, the divisions of native, foreign, etc., being as follows: Native white of native parentage, 104 males, 100 females; native white of foreign parentage, 99.5 males, 100 females; foreign white, 129.2 males, 100 females; negro, 98.9 males, 100 females; all other, 185 males, 100 females.—New York Times.

Russians Light Drinkers.

The Russian realized perfectly well the evil effect of the use of vodka upon his fellow countrymen. We must not share the belief, disseminated by the books of dilettante travelers, that every one in Russia was a hard drinker. Far from it. Certain very considerable sections of the population did not drink at all. Such were the Mohammedans, to whom the prophet of Allah had forbidden the juice of the grape; such were the sectarians among the orthodox, who refrained on principle. Many others as well did not indulge, either from distaste or from conscientious scruples. In fact, statistical evidence shows that the people of the Russian empire consumed decidedly less alcohol per capita than the peoples of many other European countries.—Robert P. Blake in Atlantic.

HOW THE HUNS DEAL WITH THEIR DEAD

Ghoulis Process of Oil Making

(From London, Eng., Daily Mail)
The amazing revelations which have appeared in "The Daily Mail" of the ghoulish traffic in dead bodies by the Huns have aroused the deepest indignation in France. The French journals have repeated the horrible account. The "Matin," for example, gave a full translation on its front page of the statement we published of this new German industry. The great need of the Huns for fats and oils has been known for a long time; but the formation of a "German Corpse-Conversion Company," with a capital of $1,250,000 and a head factory at Gerolstein, would be incredible if it were not blandly admitted with a shameless callousness of which only the Hun could be guilty.

We have already quoted some particulars which were given in the Independence Belge for April 10 (as extracted from "La Belgique" of Leyden), and in view of the unblushing confessions from German sources which may be taken as confirmation, we now quote the following details:—

BUNDLES OF CORPSES

We have known for long that the Germans stripped their dead behind the firing line, fastened them into bundles of three or four bodies with iron wire, and then despatched these grisly bundles to the rear. Until recently these trains laden with the dead were sent to Soraing, near Liege, and a point north of Brussels where were refuse consumers. Much surprise has been caused by the fact that of late this traffic has proceeded in the direction of Gerolstein, and it was noted that on each wagon was written "D. A.
V. G."

The factory is invisible from the railway. It is placed deep in forest country with a specially thick growth of trees about it. Live wires surround it. A special double track leads to it. The works are about 700 feet long 110 feet broad, and the railway runs completely round them. In the north-west corner of the works the discharge of the trains takes place.

THE ENDLESS CHAIN

The trains arrive full of bare bodies which are unloaded by the workers, who live at the works. The men wear oilskin overalls and masks with mica eye-pieces. They are equipped with long hooked poles and push the bundles of bodies to an endless chain which picks them up with big hooks, attached at intervals of 2 feet. The bodies are transported on this endless chain into a long narrow compartment where they pass through a scalding bath which disinfects them. They then go through a drying chamber, and finally are carried into a digester or great caldron, in which they are dropped by an apparatus which detaches the fat from the chain. In the dig-ester they remain from six to eight hours, and are treated by steam, which breaks them up, while they are slowly stirred by machinery. The bones sink to the bottom, leaving a thick, dark-coloured liquid.

SEVERAL "PRODUCTS."

From this treatment result several products. The fats are broken up into sterilized, a form of tallow, and oils, which require to be re-distilled before they can be used. The process of distillation is carried out by boiling the oil with carbonate of soda, and some part of the by-products resulting from this is used by German soap-makers. The oil distillery and refinery lies in the south-eastern corner of the works. The refined oil is sent out in small casks like those used for petroleum and is of a yellowish-brown color.

The fumes are exhausted from the buildings by electric fans and are sucked through a great pipe to the north-eastern corner, where they are condensed and the refuse resulting is discharged into a sewer. There is no high chimney, as the boiler furnaces are supplied with air
by electric fans.

The London Daily Telegraph publishes the following translation of a German Army order picked up after a recent battle on the western front:

A. H. Q. 21, 12, 1916
21, 12, 1916
Delivery to Corps Utilization Establishment.

It has become necessary once more to lay stress on the fact that when corpses are sent to the corpse utilization establishments returns to the unit, date of death, illness, and information as to epidemics, if any, are to be furnished at the same time.

The Bible Society Has Interesting Meeting at Frankford

Never in the history of the Bible Society has such a thoroughly interesting and enjoyable meeting been held in the town of Frankford on a week night evening than that of Tuesday, May 29th, when Mr. Leonard Smith gave his illustrated address in Trinity church, Entitled "Through Canada with the Bible Society."

Mr. Smith certainly had the right grip of his subject and held the very large gathering (for the church was well filled) from beginning to end of his address. The offering was nearly double that of last year amounting to $7.10.

The Rector the Rev. B. F. Byers was specially requested by the President to take the chair which he did—the election of officers took place with the return of all for another year—all reports were of a satisfactory nature which showed that the society is making marked progress.

Rev. Mr. Knox and Rev. Mr. Patterson were present and upon a suggestion by Mr. Knox, Mr. Patterson is appointing collectors for his charge.

The hymns selected were such that all took part in a whole hearted way, and went away feeling that the work was being blessed as it was a united work, and had no political coloring.

HUN DESTROYER SUNK.

British Win in Naval Fight Off
Zeebrugge.

LONDON, June 6.—A German destroyer has been sunk and another damaged in a running fight between six German destroyers and Commodore Tyrwhitt's squadron, the Admiralty announced. When Commodore Tyrwhitt's squadron first sighted the Germans they were five miles distant. They had apparently put to sea in fear of bombardment from the air and the water, which was being conducted on Zeebrugge and Ostend.
When they tried to regain port the British squadron divided into two lines. A British destroyer opened the engagement and her fire damaged the S-20 almost immediately.
Then a British cruiser joined in the engagement. The S-20 soon began to sink. A destroyer rescued the remaining five German destroyers. This continued until the Ger-

UNREST IN CHINA.

Government is Defied by Eleven Provinces.

PEKIN, June 6.—Eleven Provinces of China, including the Province of Chi Li, in which Peking is situated, now no longer recognize the authority of the Peking Government.

The Provinces of Kwang Tung, Kwang Si, and Yun Nan are supporting President Li Yuan Hung.

The Provisional Assembly of Kwang Tung, in assuring its loyal support to the President and Parliament, demands that the military Governors be dismissed and punished.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, former Premier Tang Shao Yi and other revolutionary leaders are proceeding hurriedly to Canton.

It seems probable that should the military Governors persist in their revolutionary course the three loyal South China Provinces named, Kwang Tung, Kwang Si, and Yun Nan, will rise in support of the President.

At present the situation is serious and the President virtually powerless.

Parliament was convened Sunday to consider a bill calling for a declaration of war against Germany.

but there was no quorum, owing to the fact that two hundred and fifty members had left Peking. Attempts are being made to influence President Li Yuan Hung to resign rather than to dissolve Parliament, the object being to throw the blame for any disturbance upon the militarists.

The militarists, it is said, do not intend to force a disturbance while they are in control of the railways. Traffic has been uninterrupted, and the militarists are demanding a new election immediately for the purpose of securing a workable constitution.

President Li Yuan Hung is powerless, owing to the Peking military commanders refusing to carry out his orders.

THREATEN SECRET MEETING.

Extraordinary Development in Campaign Against Conspiracy.

WINNIPEG, June 6.—At a secret meeting of the committee of the anti-conspiracy campaign in Winnipeg, the advisability of abandoning all attempts to hold anti-conspiracy meetings and of adopting the Russian system of secret societies and secret propaganda will be considered, according to a statement made by F. J. Dixon, M.L.A., Monday.

"If the authorities permit the suppression of free speech, and if they refuse to allow us to hold meetings, we will have no alternative but the adoption of the Russian system," Mr. Dixon declared.

"Secret societies and secret propaganda were a success in Russia, where free speech was impossible under the old regime, and I have no doubt they will prove successful here, too, if we are compelled to resort to these methods."

Some of the members of the committee are in favor of holding another anti-conspiracy meeting, supplying the speakers with bodyguards of trained pugilists, and restricting the admittance to civilians. They declare that if the meeting is again broken up they will support the secret society and secret propaganda, heart and soul.

BRUSILOFF IN COMMAND.

General Alexieff Resigns Leadership of Russian Army.

PETROGRAD, June 6.—General Michael V. Alexieff, Commander-in-chief of the Russian armies, has resigned. General Alexieff Brusiloff, Commander-in-chief of the armies of the Southwestern front, has been appointed to succeed him.

General Curko, Commander on the Western front, replaces Brusiloff on the Eastern front.

General Alexieff was appointed Commander-in-chief on April 15, soon after the retirement of Grand Duke Nicholas from that position.

General Brusiloff recently resigned from his position as Commander-in-chief of the armies of the Southwestern front, but withdrew his resignation after a conference at Petrograd.

German Officer Held.

LONDON, June 6.—A Reuter despatch from Riga says that the Russians have detained Lieut. Rabenok of the 182nd Saxon Regiment, who came to the Russian lines with separate peace proposals. German airplanes dropped demands for his release before June 5, threatening that otherwise he would be terribly avenged. The Russians replied that Rabenok was regarded as a deserter, and had been sent to the interior of Russia.

British Coast Bombed.

LONDON, June 6.—Sixteen German aeroplanes came over the North Sea last evening and dropped many bombs on the small towns and villages in Essex and Kent. Only 14 of them returned to their home base, for two of them were brought down by British guns.

So far as late reports show, only two persons were killed and 29 injured in the bombarded districts. The raiders, the Cabinet was now awaiting, extra precautions having been taken by the British authorities after the recent very serious raid on the south-east coast of England, in which 250 persons were killed or wounded. The Germans were attacked by British aviators before they had an opportunity to carry out their raiding intentions to any great extent, and the British anti-aircraft guns were very effective.

Settlement in Ireland.

LONDON, June 6.—The Government completed last week its proposal as to the composition of the Irish convention. Andrew Bonar Law, Government leader in the House of Commons, told the members of the lower Chamber yesterday that the Cabinet was now awaiting the decision of some of the parties interested, who are holding a meeting to consider it. Their decision is expected in the course of the next few days.

Farmers Will Co-operate.

TORONTO, June 6.—The movement to co-ordinate and consolidate the interests of the farmers of the Dominion is making big headway, judging by the reports submitted at a big rally in the Newmarket town hall on Saturday night, at which addresses were given by Roderick McKenzie, secretary of the Western Grain Growers' Association, E. C. Drury, J. Morrison, secretary of the local club, Hon. E. J. Davis, and others. The chair was occupied by G. A. Brodie, president of the local association, and Roderick McKenzie submitted a lot of statistics showing the rapid growth of the co-operative movement in the west. The western farmers were a dominating factor, and immense benefits had resulted from the movement. Resolutions supporting the movement for closer co-operation were adopted and plans perfected for carrying on the work of eliminating the middleman.

Grand Duke a Prisoner.

LONDON, June 6.—A despatch from Petrograd Saturday reported that Grand Duke Nicholas, former commander-in-chief of the Russian armies, has been arrested at Tiflis, following a riot. Tiflis is the base of the Russian troops operating against the Turks in the Caucasus.

Royalist outbreaks in the Caucasus are said to mean but one thing—a plot to make the idol of the army, the Grand Duke, Czar—if not of Russia, then of an independent Caucasian realm.

Despatches also told of the transfer of the Czar to the " safer " fortress of Rostov and Pori.

Automobile Tops.

The practice of running an automobile with the top up when it is not needed is costly, according to tests which I made, says a contributor to Popular Mechanics. When the back of the top cannot be rolled up the resistance is especially great. Six miles more were obtained from a gallon of gasoline with the top rolled and covered as compared with having the top up with the back closed. When going against the wind this extra pull is especially heavy, and difficulty in making a hard climb may often be relieved by lowering the top. Careful regulation of the top, using it only when essential, will be found to be a worth while factor in reducing the gasoline bill.

Some of Burns' Phrases.

Here are a few specimens of Burns' happy phrases: "The best laid schemes of mice and men gang aft agley;" "The fear of hell's the haughtiest's whip, to hound the wretch in order;" "But pleasures are like poppies spread; you seize the flower, its bloom is shed;" "Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us to see ourselves as others see us;" "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn;" "Nursing her wrath to keep it warm;" "The mirth and fun grew fast and furious;" "What's done we partly may compute but know not what's resisted;" "Princes and lords are but the breath of kings;" "The rank is but the guinea stamp; a man's a man for a' that."

A Mild Threat.

The following story is told of the late Dr. Timothy Dwight. In his early days, when he was a tutor in charge of student discipline at Yale—a sort of proctor, apparently—he was called out of his room by some midnight escapee. He was obliged as a matter of duty to pursue the disturber, and with his long legs he soon found himself gaining rapidly upon them. Thereupon a solemn voice rang out suddenly into the night:

"Gentlemen, if you don't run a little faster I shall be obliged to overtake you."

Many Prisoners Taken.

PARIS, June 6.—Saturday night's official report said: "From April 1 up to the present the number of prisoners captured by the French and British troops on the Western front exceeded 52,000, of whom more than 1,000 were officers. Included in the enormous material taken from the enemy during the same time were 445 heavy and field cannon, 1,000 machine guns, and a considerable number of trench guns."

Two thousand Serbians were shot to death by a "chêne gas" for attempting to start an insurrection.

Quite Musical.

It may be so, and it may not, but a Los Angeles student affirms it in an examination paper, and here it is: "Beethoven discovered the sonata in four moves. Before this it was a sweet lie wrote many piano sonatas for the violin, and they were called string quartets. When a piano sonata was for an orchestra it was called a symphony. The ninth piano sonata he wrote for voices to sing."

ENTERED INTO REST

JOHN WRIGHT

On Thursday May 31st there passed away in the person of Mr. John Wright one of the oldest and most highly respected residents of Huntingdon. He was the son of Enoch Wright and Esther Reed and was born in 1841 on the farm where his brother Hiram now lives. For over fifty years Mr. Wright resided on the farm on which he died.

He was twice married, first to Mary Ann Osborne to whom three children were born, two of whom survive him, Jane, (Mrs. Lynn) Queensboro; James in Saskatchewan. His second wife was Susanna Kerr of Hungerford, who survives him. There were born to them nine children 8 of whom are living, John, Robert, Morley, Cl a lotte, (Mrs. Geo. E. Morrow) Ella (Mrs. Wm. Donald).

He was a kind father, a devoted husband, a considerate neighbor an upright and industrious citizen and for many years a consistent member of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, West Huntingdon.

The funeral service conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. T. Hall, under the auspices of the Orange Order, was largely attended.

CANADIANS MAKE GAIN

Hold Electric Light Station Near Lens.

General Haig Reports Slight Advance South of the Souchez River—Heavy Artillery Duels Are Reported in British and German Official Communications.

LONDON, June 6.—The British official communication issued last night reports a slight gain of ground during Monday night south of the Souchez River. It says also that the electric power station in this vicinity which the Canadians captured Sunday, but were forced to evacuate, has again been captured by the Canadians.

The opposing armies near Wytschaete, in Belgium, are still engaged in a violent artillery duel, which probably is the forerunner of a great infantry action at an early date. Already, according to Berlin, the British, after having buried great quantities of steel against the German defences, advanced to see the result of the work of their guns, but were forced by the German fire to return to their positions, where their rain of shells again was resumed.

The electric light station southwest of Lens, for possession of which two fiercely-contested engagements have taken place, and where many hundreds of German, British, and Canadian soldiers have been killed and wounded, appeared to be safely within the Canadian lines yesterday morning.

The German guns turned on it on Monday afternoon in fairly conclusive evidence that the enemy had found it untenable upon his return on Sunday night. Early yesterday morning the Canadian troops holding the trench in the vicinity of the station pushed out to the east of it.

The situation is not quite clear on the front, but generally it was a very lively night.

The enemy dropped bombs behind the lines and also sent out a raiding party, which was discovered before it reached our trenches. It was driven off, leaving five dead or prisoners. They were able to carry off the wounded.

Nest of a Turtle.

The manner in which a turtle constructs her nest is both interesting and suggestive, it being one of the most expeditious operations ever performed by that slow moving creature.

After selecting a suitable spot she begins digging out a hole with her hind legs by moving slowly in a circle and throwing the excavated sand in a rim all around it. When that is about eighteen inches in depth and twelve in circumference she drops her eggs into it, pulls the rim of sand over them and, rising on all four legs, lets her body drop heavily on the covering sand until she has made it as compact as any part of the surrounding beach. She then makes a few false demonstrations on the shore to mislead inquisitive enemies and hastens to the sea as fast as she can travel.

Insects in Flight.

Motion pictures of insects in flight prove that the movement of the wings of all insects presents the same general character. When flight is begun the amplitude of the first wing beats is much smaller than of the subsequent ones, but the period remains almost unchanged. The insect regulates the velocity of its flight not by the rapidity of the motion of its wings, but by changing their inclination. Although in normal conditions the period of the wing beat remains constant, it may be increased or diminished by various influences, such as fatigue and cold.

Letter from Gr. Hoard

The following letter has been received by Wallace Hoard, Rawdon, from his son Gunner C. W. Hoard, England.

Dear Folks at Home:
Well, we got away at last and here I am in a tent—but wait—I'll start from the first.

After our usual false starts we got away from Halifax Barracks on Sunday morning, April 29th, and went on board the "Olympic" about 10.30. We were nearly the last troops on but they saved us exceptionally fine quarters down on E deck. We were in 2nd class cabins, four to a cabin and were mighty comfortable. My three pals and I were together.

The "Olympic" was certainly a swell ship. She is slightly over 58 rods, (962) feet long, and over 40 feet from her keel to the water line. She is the largest British vessel afloat at present, as well as the fastest, and has a tonnage of 46,380 tons.

We spent Sunday afternoon rambling about the ship, especially on deck.
About 6 o'clock we backed out of the dock and headed eastward on our long journey. A short time later my legs felt as though I weighed a ton, but a moment later I was as light as a feather and I felt rather than knew that I had taken my first roll on the ocean. Then about 8 o'clock old Canada's shores faded into the mist and horizon, and believe me, it gives you a funny feeling to see your native country slowly fade from view and no knowing whether you'll ever see it again. A few minutes later I looked for my bunk. There I found one of the fellows sick. I didn't feel very well myself so crawled in and a few minutes later the other fellows did the same. I didn't get much sleep that night. Our cabin was near the engines and the roar and vibration of them made sleep nearly impossible. The next two days I kept mostly to my bunk.

Monday was the only day the waves were of any size and then they often washed over the front quarter-deck. By Wednesday I was feeling pretty fit and began to enjoy being on deck, but the scentery became monotonous, nothing but water.

We passed two vessels on our way over. We had fire alarms every morning and afternoon and everybody had to come on deck. The first day or so of these drills—that old college song came back to me:—

"They were leaning o'er the rail
With their faces deathly pale,
Were they looking for a whale?
Not at all—not at all.
There the son of every mother Doing same as many other
"Casting bread upon the water"
That was all! That was all!"

The ocean was very calm however.
There was scarcely a white cap after Monday and I never saw a fish, not even a flying fish. Tuesday we ran into a dense fog and the siren blew every minute nearly all day. Saturday morning we tumbled out bright and early to see the Emerald Isles and never did land look so welcome. We were escorted by two destroyers and they were pretty sauce looking things, short, low in the water but could travel fast. We saw several British submarines that day.

Sunday was also spent on the water, but we weren't sight of land all day. We then had four destroyers for escort.
Monday morning May 7th, we got up at 3 o'clock and had breakfast at 5. We docked about 7 at Liverpool, and disembarked about 11.30 a.m. Entrained for Ottawa about 1.30. They were packed in coaches. They are small and divided into five compartments, each one holding eight men. Each one of these is separate and you enter from the side. There was room for eight alright with no luggage, but with our amount of luggage we were anything but comfortable. The engines and cars are a lot smaller than in Canada most freight cars having a capacity of from 6 to 10 tons. They have good road beds and trains travel anywhere up to seventy miles an hour. We arrived at camp here about 11.30 and were a tired and sleepy bunch. We loaded our kit bags in a big motor bus and started for the tents, a distance of two miles.

We turned in about 2.30, nine of us in each tent and we slept with our feet to the tent pole and our hands against the canvas.

Just now it is awfully cold, there being a cold wind from the north-west. We have spent today (the 8th) getting settled down. We are at Otterpool segregation camp and quarantined for a space of 28 days to see if we have any infectious disease among us.

Here a person really realizes a war is on. Besides being on limited rations we cannot waste a crumb. If we throw away a crust an inch square we are liable to 28 days detention and loss of 24 days pay.

In all the mills and fields coming down we saw women working and I haven't seen a young man in civilian clothes yet.

There is an aerodrome just a couple of miles from here and we see many of the machines. In fact we often see a dozen in the air at once. It is only about twenty minutes flying from here to the front trenches. We can plainly hear the great guns in France, blasting their way slowly towards Berlin.

Well this is nearly all the news for
now. I'll write again soon.

With plenty of love to you all, I am

Your loving boy

Points to Consider When Pur- chasing a Railway Ticket

A Canadian Pacific Railway ticket does not represent merely a means of transportation between given points. It in addition, provides the traveller with every comfort and convenience developed by modern railway science, "Safety First," with up-to-date equipment, unexcelled dining service, palatial sleeping cars, in a word, everything that a railway can provide for the comfortable transportation of its passengers, including courtesy.

Address and Presentation

On Friday evening, June 8th, about seventy-five young people of Wellman's Corners and vicinity gathered in the spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm.
Pollock to spend a social evening with the bride-elect Miss Alice.

After music and social intercourse the President of the League, Mr. Wesley Johnston called for order after which an address was read. Miss Pollock was completely taken by surprise, and thanked her friends for their manifestation of true friendship. Following is the address:—

Wellman's, June 8th, 1917

Miss Alice Pollock:

Dear Alice, having learned that you are soon to leave our midst and for a time sever the ties which have bound us together as co-workers in a great common cause.

We your fellow League workers feel that we cannot allow you to depart without showing in some slight way the high regard we entertain for you as a friend and helper in our Epworth League.

As a member you have always endeavored to attend regularly and have ever been willing to assist in all departments of the work, while your cheerful sunny disposition has won for you many warm and lasting friends. As a slight token of the high regard we entertain for you and our appreciation of your assistance in our work, we ask you to accept this cut glass fruit bowl, as a reminder of the many warm friends you leave here. We fully realize that

True friendship is a sacred thing
Not to be bought or sold.
And to present a friend like you is worth far more than gold.

Your many friends have met tonight
Their greetings to extend,
And wish you many happy years
May joy your ways attend.

May health and happiness be yours,
And sunshine light your way.

Times Have Changed

One of our exchanges last week reported the visit of a farmer to town for the purpose of selling a hog, a sack of beans and a bushel of wheat. After disposing of these he bought a Ford car, a new set of clothes, a dress for his wife and each of his four daughters. The balance of his money, after paying his taxes and seventeen years back subscription to the local paper, he put in the bank for safe keeping. He has two more hogs, but does not intend to sell them until the family is ready to take a trip to Europe to see the battlefields where the war is in progress.

ACROSS AUSTRALIA.

Forty-one Miles Undone On Transcontinental Railway.

Only forty-one miles of track are now needed to complete the Australian transcontinental railway. The importance of this news can hardly be over-estimated, for the completion of the small piece of trackage promises to have an influence on Australia's development comparable to a way with that exerted upon the development of this country by the opening of the Union Pacific nearly half a century ago. The immediate effect will be to link up the capitals of the five continental states of the Australian Commonwealth by establishing an unbroken line of communication through Brisbane, on the east, through Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide, to Perth, on the west, a distance just a little short of thirty-five hundred miles.

The Australian transcontinental railway has been long in the building, and is the result of the linking up of isolated stretches of lines constructed in and by the different states rather than of a carefully matured program of development. By the year 1889 railway communication had been established between the four capital cities of Brisbane, Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide, a distance of 1,780 miles, through the connecting at the borders of the state railway lines of Queensland, New South Wales, Victoria and South Australia, which line was in time extended from Adelaide northwest to Port Augusta, a distance of 260 miles. About the same time Western Australia had built a state railway eastward for 375 miles from Perth to Kalgoorlie, in the heart of the gold fields.

Nothing was done looking toward the tracking of this 1,985 mile gap between Port Augusta, in South Australia, and Kalgoorlie, in Western Australia, until 1907, when the Commonwealth government ordered a preliminary survey of a line to connect these extremities of the existing lines from the east and west. As a result of that survey the Commonwealth decided, four years later, to construct the railway as a government line. Work was started at both ends in September, 1912, and the construction has progressed so rapidly that there now remain only forty-one miles of track to connect the Port Augusta and Kalgoorlie division.

It is probable that the opening of the first Australian transcontinental line will have the same immediate effect as did the opening of the first American transcontinental line. The Australian railway, and more particularly the thousand-mile stretch between Port Augusta and Kalgoorlie, passes through a relatively poor and barren land, which does not seem now susceptible of the same agricultural development as the land pierced by the Union Pacific. And again the largest results cannot be anticipated from the Australian trunk line because of the lack of uniformity of gauge throughout its length, a defect traceable to the different gauges adopted by the different states in the first days of railroad building. In the trip from Brisbane to Perth four transfers of passenger and freight will be necessary, and the trouble, delay and added expense to these transfers, already of appreciable magnitude along the eastern section of the line, will naturally become more serious along the entire line as the volume of business increases.

this present defect, which the Commonwealth government is already to remedy, the completion of the Australian transcontinental railway will undoubtedly facilitate interstate trade and, in conjunction with its principal branches, will allow the producer of inland areas to find its natural outlet at the nearest port—Philadelphia Commercial Museum.

With a wild sweep the wind tore round a corner and removed the hat from the head of a respectable and near-sighted citizen, who chanced to be passing, says the life.

Peering wildly round, the man thought he saw a hat in his yard, behind a high fence. Hastily he went, behind a high fence to check it, but each time he thought he had caught it, it got another angry voice on him.

"What are you doing there?" she demanded, shrilly.

He explained mildly that he was only trying to retrieve his hat. "Whereupon the woman said, 'Wonder.'"

"Your hat? Well, I don't know where it is, but, that's our little bit, when you're chasing."

FUMIGATE.

Sulphur is a Splendid Deodorizer and Disinfectant.

Sulphur is a powerful disinfectant and deodorizer. The fumes or gas is intensely irritating to the throat when inhaled and may produce dangerous inflammation of the respiratory passages. For this reason, when burning sulphur for the purposes of disinfection it is always important to avoid exposing oneself to the gas.

The sulphur to be burned should be placed on a shovel or iron steel plate, in the room to be fumigated, all outlets to be closed. Break the sulphur up in small bits and pour alcohol over it; then set fire to it and close the door to the room or closet.

For every 1,000 cubic feet of air space to be disinfected five pounds of sulphur are necessary.

The time of exposure required for bacterial infections is 24 hours. For fumigation necessary to destroy mosquitoes and other vermin a shorter time will suffice, about six or eight hours.

Sulphur gas bleaches fabrics of material dyed with vegetable or aniline dyes. It destroys linen or cotton by rotting the fibre. It injures most metals.

Sulphur is very destructive to all forms of animal life, and this property renders it a valuable agent for the extermination of rats and other vermin.

During the housecleaning season sulphur may be used with advantage in disinfecting dark closets and musty rooms. It is useful in all localities where rats and mice are found.

It must be borne in mind, however, that all draperies in carpets will fade; also wallpaper, if exposed to the fumes of sulphur, hats and clothing are also bleached by it.

After a locality has been disinfected it should be thrown wide open to admit the air and sunshine for twenty-four hours.

MAN AND WIFE IN DUEL.

Father and Mother of French Poet Fought With Swords.

Charles Coquereau, Sieur d'Amou, a French poet and musician of the seventeenth century, relates in one of his "Adventures" that his father and mother were one day engaged in a discussion upon questions of law when a dispute arose between them with regard to the precise significance and bearing of a provision in Justinian's code with respect to the rights of brothers.

Ultimately the quarrel waxed so furious that the disputants lost all control of themselves, and each other's slight contempt and proceeded to settle their differences by the sword. The father, who was the more powerful, and had to wear exceptionally high patterns to approach the ordinary state of women, but who was fierce and domineering in temper. The combat appears to have been a draw battle, and the sense of Justinian reminded an obscure and debatable as ever—Excelsior.

SAND PAINTING.

Strange Old Art of the Navajo Indians.

In Gallup, New Mexico, in the land of the painted desert, where the flaming colors of every sunset are cut done by the bright, barbaric hues of rocky hill and canyon, says Frederick J. Haskin, there flourishes one of the least known and most beautiful of the arts of primitive people. In the fastnesses of the Navajo reservation, hedged about by miles of lava-strewn mesa, dwell the sand painters, priests and artists of a barbarian tribe.

Their art is like music, in that it has a form and elabour but no permanence. No one knows how well the masters of the past worked on it; of their works no trace remains. There is nothing but word of mouth tradition, handed down from father to son, to keep green the memory of those who wrought patiently and well. Literally their names are written in the sand.

Like all the art of savage people, the work of these Indian craftsmen is fraught with a mystic religious significance, but in and for itself, it has all the claims to respect of any of the arts. The sand painter has for his canvas of circle of pure, smooth, white sand, 10 or 12 feet in diameter. This sand has been carefully selected from a country side of sand; it has

TITLES IN RUSSIA.

Where There Are Only Two Classes, Nobles and Peasants.

Contrary to the laws existing in England and Sweden, in Russia when a lady belongs to a titled family marries a Russian gentleman without a title she takes her husband's name entirely, and the only right left to her of her former title is to write on her visiting cards and official papers, "Mrs. So and so, born Princess, Countess or Baroness So-and-so." Her children are called by their father's name. There are only a few exceptions to this rule.

In Russia no middle class or gentry are known. There are only nobles and peasants. The Czar, however, grants sometimes for special merit the right to be styled a nobleman and also for the same reason the titles of count and baron and occasionally that of prince. All those merchants who have kept their firms always flourishing for a hundred years have the right to receive the foreign title of baron. This law was made by Peter the Great over 200 years ago, but the merchants very seldom accept the title and generally decline the privilege.

In former days when the peasants were still slaves they had no family names, but were called by their father's Christian name. Peter's son was been cleaned and purified with endless patience. The artist smooths its surface until it is as plane as a polished table.

On that smooth surface he traces queer and intricate designs—designs formed of jagged lines—of broken triangles, of the conventionalized whirling cross of fire and the swastika.

Nowhere does the pattern merge slovenly into the background. Pure white meets pure red or blue as though the colors were blocks of stone cunningly ground to fit each other. Every line and angle has its hidden significance; but in striving to tell a tribal legend with grains of desert sand, the wrinkled old priest has caught the spirit of beauty itself.

The art of sand painting is not confined to the Navajos but this tribe has brought it to the highest pitch of perfection. The method in which each painting is made has been conventionalized by many centuries of usage. The sand painting is probably the oldest of the Navajo arts, although it was one of the last to come to the knowledge of the white man, being kept secret even after Arizona and New Mexico came into United States possession on account of the religious character of the ceremony.

ruled son of Peter—in Russian Peter; so also Smornov—Simon's son; Ivanov—Ivan's (John) son, and so on. When slavery was abolished and the emancipation proclaimed by the Emperor Alexander II, they all kept these names. Since then many of them have received the right to belong to the class of nobles.

The Russian clergy, belonging to the class of peasants, for it very seldom happens that nobles become priests, have special family names. Their names mean always a feast day or a precious stone or something connected with the church. In former days the clergy was a class apart, and a son of a clergyman was bound to be a clergyman, and when they first entered the church they chose a name for themselves. London Answers.

PEAKS 11,000 FEET HIGH

Made Accessible by Kootenay Central Branch, C.P.R.

The wonderful icefields and eleven-thousand-foot-high peaks of the Purcell range, which the construction of the Kootenay Central branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway has rendered accessible to mountain climbers, are described and illustrated by Mr. C. W. Stone in the Canadian Alpine Journal for 1916. The approach to Mount Ethelbert, a peak which arrests the attention at Spillimacheen Station, seems almost to have overwhelmed the writer with its beauty. "Before us," he says, "lay a lake of exquisite blue color resting like a jewel in a setting between two rugged peaks, which mirrored in the clear water, rose abruptly thousands of feet on either hand like grim guardians of a lovely treasure. Beyond the lake the lifted eyes rested on a terrace stretched across the valley like a giant curtain eighteen hundred feet above the lake, down whose verdant slopes two gleaming cascades traced their foaming course and filled the whole amphitheatre with the sounds of falling water. Still farther and higher in the background, the great snow crests appeared, inscrutably looking down upon us."

Three considerable parties of Alpine climbers, numbering nearly forty in all, mostly from the United States, made ascent in this region during the past summer in the invitation of Mr. A. H. MacCarthy, an enthusiastic member of the Canadian Alpine Club, who has a fine ranch at Wilmer in the Windermere district. Under Mr. MacCarthy's leadership important explorations have been made up the various creeks piercing the eastern slopes of the Selkirk and Purcell ranges. Mr. MacCarthy being of the opinion that for interest and variety and spectacular beauty this mountain region is without rival on the North American Continent, and as soon as roads and trails are built will attract many tourists who have hitherto been content with the more beaten path of the C. P. R. main line.

Charm of Praha.

No traveler who has visited Rumania returns without praising the wonders of Praha. Here, after one has passed the heights of Predel, is a charming valley in the midst of forests, of great rocks and spouting waters. The landscape evokes recollections of Switzerland, with architecture that recalls the orient. Asgha, Hustina, are seated on the bank of a tumultuous river.

Small The court and the Rumanian aristocracy have built in this delightful valley their summer homes. There are no large hotels. All that make life at Bukharest is taken over by sojourners to the shades of freshness. Praha and its sweet freshness. Near Sibiu, the valley widens and Campina appears, the chief city of the coal lands and of the salt mines. Alms that are at liberty assemble about a block of salt to lick it, for salt, like petroleum, is everywhere.

Africa Will Lead in Railways.

Africa already has the foundation for one of the complete and most evenly distributed railway systems of all the great continents of the world. Save Europe, the railways of all the other great geographical divisions are largely located in areas which are highly developed areas—as in the United States and southern Canada in North America while other regions are left blank and promise to remain so indefinitely. In Africa, a vigorous pushing of any considerable proportion of the projects that were in contemplation before the war will not only a fairly even network of lines over the greater part of its area, but also more transcontinental lines—both latitudinal and longitudinal—than either South America or Asia will be able to boast at the same date. Also in the imminent completion of the action which will be considerably accelerated by certain work done during the war—it will have a line traversing its entire length from north to south long before any continent but Europe can lay claim to such a railway. The Cape to Cairo—such a railway, all the lakes eliminated—might easily bring Capetown within ten or twelve days of London and Paris, and a day or two could certainly be cut from even this schedule by a line from French plan to run across the Sahara, poste Gibraltar and the Belgian Congo via Lake Tchad and the Belgian Congo, northern Rhodesia—World Outlook.

Cheese Question Settled

On Monday June 4th, the Hon. Martin Burrell announced in the House that the Cheese Commission had been authorized by the British Board of Trade to pay 2 1/2c f.o.b. steamer, Montreal, for No. 1 finest grade cheese and that buying on this basis would begin as soon as arrangements could be made. The price to factories would, of course, be less the inland freight and usual handling charges. Existing methods of buying and selling at country points would be continued. The Cheese Commission would meet the trade at Montreal as soon as possible in order to complete arrangements to give effect to the Board Trade proposals.

The Minister of Agriculture explained that last autumn the British Government had attempted to secure all the Canadian cheese, but acted too late in the season. The Canadian Government recommended that for the present season plans should be perfected in January or February, but nothing was done. In the meantime the British Government had commandeered the New Zealand cheese at 19 cents per pound and recommended commandeering the Canadian cheese. To this the Canadian Government objected but suggested commission, with one British representative, to arrange the matter.

The present offer of purchase, therefore, from the British Board of Trade enables the Cheese Commission to make arrangements on the basis of 2 1/2c f.o.b. steamer Montreal, which will give the farmer about 3c to 3 1/2c per lb. more than he received last year at this time. Business will now go on as heretofore through its normal channels as soon as arrangements are made by the Cheese Commission.

Eaton Catalogues

The Eaton Catalogues that came to Simcoe a week or so ago for distribution in that community filled a couple of big drays. We fancy Norfolk County's share of the cost of the Eaton catalogue would come pretty close to meeting the advertising bills of all the merchants of Simcoe. The question is, whose is the better judgment, the Eaton Company's or the town merchant's who parrot-like, keeps on muttering over his formula: "It doesn't pay to advertise." Eaton's are every year spending more money on advertising; every year there are convincing signs that they are cutting more deeply into the business of town merchants. While a majority—not all, but a majority—of the merchants of every town in Ontario blindfold refuse to see why the drift is away from them and refuse to apply the remedy. The town merchant cannot fight the city department store by sitting in his office and wringing his hands. But if he will only recognize his position he will find that he has more than one counter in his hands in the game with the city store. He is on the spot; he is personally known to the community he wishes to cater to; some of his costars higher; he can make good at once any error that occurs. If he will adopt as his own the two most trenchant weapons of the department store, live advertising and dependable service, he will at least secure a draw in the fight. Simcoe Reformer.

Mr. Ross Eastwood of this place, and Mr. Vernon Reid have enlisted for overseas service with the Motor Cycle Corps in Toronto. Both boys were members of the Argonauts Organized Boys' class of St. Marks S. S. and will be very much missed. They were both officers of the class, and Pte. Eastwood was the representative for this Sunday School at the Boys Work Conference at Toronto last fall as well as at Peterboro the year before, where he won great praise, by replying on behalf of the rural delegates present, to the Mayor's address of welcome. He was also Secretary of the Sunday School. Pte. Reid has several times before attempted to enlist but until now he has not been able to get accepted. We wish both these lads the best of luck. They should make first class soldiers. Pte. Eastwood was home for a few days visit and returned on Tuesday of last week.
